Eventually, Larson said the north loop of the trail system will connect to a trail on nearby National Park Service property. "They have an easement on property to the west of the Discovery Bridge," he said. "The trail connection will go under the bridge. The trail connection isn't in place because of erosion from the flood last summer. There is some work that is going to have to be done by the Nebraska Department of Roads."

Looking ahead to the spring, Larson stated that plans are being developed for what to do at the north foot of the Meridian Bridge. Keep Yankton Beautiful is expected to present suggestions to the City Commission soon. Some elements of the plan have been decided.

"In the spring, from Riverside Drive to Second Street, Walnut Street will be no more," Larson said. "All the road bed, curb and gutters, and the concrete underneath the upper deck will be removed. There will be improvements to the storm sewer system in the area, and black dirt will be brought in to shape the land for proper drainage."

Trails will be built to provide access to the bridge.

However, much of the work done this year will be done with the idea that it won't necessarily be permanent, Larson said.

"We don't have a hard, aggressive plan in place because we need to see what the usage is going to be, what the traffic patterns are and develop ideas," he stated. "We don't want to spend a lot of money to put things in that we might later take out."

Those later additions could include sculptures, a fountain, other water features, trees and flower beds.

In fact, much of the city's approach to the bridge this year will be observational rather than experimental, Larson said.

"Let's have the bridge open for one year without shutting down any levels or renting any space on it to see what kind of traffic and usage it gets," he stated. "After a year, we'll know. If that bridge is so popular during the summer that there are bodies on it day and night, the Park Advisory Board is going to have trouble saying, 'We're going to shut this level down for a day so you can have a wedding and set up chairs.'"

"Through this first year, we will receive a lot of phone calls with ideas and we will keep a master list," Larson continued. "Will we implement every one of them? Probably not. But at least they will be ideas we can take to the Park Advisory Board to figure out which ones have merit and which do not."

setts, Romney hadn't made any attempt to change a law that permitted convicted violent felons to vote while still on parole, a law that the former Pennsylvania senator said was more liberal than the one he has been assailed for supporting.

Romney replied that as Republican governor, he was confronted with a legislature that was heavily Democratic and held a different position.

He also reminded Santorum that candidates have no control over the campaign groups that have played a pivotal role in the race to date.

Romney added that the millions in outside dollars are "one of the things I decry" about the current system. At the same time, he has repeatedly refused to denounce the negative ads that the group supporting him has been spending millions to run in early states.

"It is inaccurate," Santorum said of the ad assailing him, seeking the last word. "I would go out and say, 'Stop it. That you're representing me and you're representing my campaign. Stop it.'"

The five remaining candidates also sought to outdo one another in calling for lower taxes.

Paul won that competition handily, saying he thought the top rate should be zero.

Romney has victories in the only two contests of the campaign thus far, the Iowa caucuses and New Hampshire primary earlier this month. Gingrich has conceded that the former Massachusetts governor will likely be the party's nominee if he is similarly victorious in South Carolina, an assertion that none of the others in the race has so far contested.

That raised the significance of the night's debate, as well as another one scheduled for Thursday in Charleston.

Romney is the leader in the public opinion polls in South Carolina, although his rivals hope the state's high, 9.9 percent unemployment rate and the presence of large numbers of socially conservative evangelical voters will allow one of them to slip by him.

Huntsman was the second campaign dropout to endorse Romney, after former Minnesota Gov. Tom Pawlenty. Minnesota Rep. Michele Bachmann, who quit after a last-place finish in Iowa, has not yet said which of the remaining contenders she supports. Herman Cain, who left the race in December after facing allegations of sexual impropriety, has promised an endorsement soon.

Huntsman's parting announcement included a reference to the differences he and Romney had. But he left the podium without responding to questions about his remark last week, in the run-up to the New Hampshire primary, that Romney was unelectable and out of touch.

It was unclear why Romney did not attend the announcement. He was in town for a later campaign appearance and then the debate.

In Loving Memory of...

Allen Andersh

who passed away on January 17, 2010

God's finger touched him
And he slipped away
From earth's dark shadow
To a brighter day.
God saw the road was getting rough
The hills were hard to climb
He gently closed his weary eyes
And whispered "Peace be thine."
To a beautiful garden
He has gone but our memory of him still lives on.
Sadly missed by your family
