Daily opinions from the P&D Sports Staff on local and national high school, college and professional sports.

This week has been a strong reminder that you can't always believe what you hear, even when you feel it comes from a credible source.

After a decade of violently denying any involvement in unethical behavior, cyclist Lance Armstrong did a television interview and admitted to years of PED use, blood doping and deceit. His seven Tour de France titles long expunged, it seems that there is little left for Armstrong to salvage but the faint hope that some day his ban will be removed and he can compete in triathlons and the like.

Also this week, reports surfaced that the story of Manti Te'o's girlfriend who died of leukemia was a hoax.

What Are We To Take From A Week Of Nasty Sports Stories?

My Heisman vote for Te'o was based on his on-the-field prowess, not some off-the-field story, so I am not offended by this revelation. But I know many of my colleagues did take this story into account, and many fans supported the defensive standpoint based on it.

In each case, there were many stories from many different sources talking about how "great" each individual was. Many people put both of these individuals on a pedestal. But the thing about putting people on that pedestal is that it's that much further for them to fall — and many do.

As I hear stories like these, I am reminded of the old Charles Barkley commercial, "I am not a role model" because, as much as we love sports and celebrity, those who are held up for who they are are often exposed by what they do.

Celebrating A Scoring Record In Beresford
