Senate Panel To Hold Hearing On Baucus Nomination

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee will hold a hearing Jan. 28 on President Barack Obama's pick of retiring Sen. Max Baucus to serve as ambassador to China.

The six-term Democratic senator is expected to sail toward confirmation by his colleagues. If confirmed, Baucus would replace Gary Locke, who has announced plans to leave the diplomatic post.

Baucus, 72, has served in the Senate for more than three decades. He said last year he would not seek reelection to another term. Obama announced the nomination last year.

Baucus said in a statement Wednesday that he is looking to follow in the footsteps of his friend and mentor, the late Sen. Mike Mansfield, who was U.S. ambassador to Japan for more than a decade after leaving the Senate.

Sen. Max Baucus

"The U.S.-China relationship is one of the world's most important bilateral relationships. My goal will be to further strengthen diplomatic and economic ties," Baucus said.

If Baucus is confirmed and resigns from the Senate to take the new post, Democratic Gov. Steve Bullock of Montana will get to name a replacement to fill the seat until January 2015.

Bullock has repeatedly declined to discuss who he may be considering or how he will go about vetting candidates.

"Until there is a vacancy, we're going to stay mum on it," Bullock spokesman Mike Wessler said Wednesday.

Bullock's lieutenant governor, John Walsh, has asked the governor to appoint him to the seat once it becomes available.

That appointment would give Walsh experience and a higher visibility as he seeks the Democratic nomination for the seat in this year's elections — and possibly give Democrats a boost at retaining control of the Senate.

Republicans need to gain a net of six seats to gain control of the Senate.

Former Lt. Gov. John Bohlinger, who is competing against Walsh for the Democratic nomination, said the race would become almost impossible for him to win if Bullock appoints Walsh, and that he may withdraw if that happens.

Freshman Rep. Steve Daines is running for the Republican nomination.

Weather

the bigger picture, Heitkamp said.

"They are all connected to global weather patterns," he said. "We are seeing a trough of low pressure over the central United States and over the East Coast, while the West Coast has a ridge of high pressure and dry weather."

According to the NWS, the bitter cold in the United States and Canada during the first week of January was connected to the weakening of an atmospheric phenomenon known as the polar vortex. Now, forecasters are predicting a similar cold snap for the end of January.

Earlier this month, the vortex brought wind-chill readings of 50 degrees below zero. The vortex is making its presence felt again this week, resulting in wind-chill readings of 35 degrees below zero.

However, the polar vortex itself isn't an unusual phenomenon, said South Dakota state climatologist Dennis Today.

"The polar vortex is a regularly existing pool of cold air which exists over both the North and South Pole," he said. "It exists continuously but is strongest in the winter when the pole is dark and cooling quickly."

The vortex has become noticeable in the Great Plains because it has dipped further south, Today said.

"The vortex regularly takes on different shapes and expands and contracts, allowing cold air to come down over us. That is where we get our usual cold outbreaks from," he said.

"The pool of cold air mis-shapes, the jet stream dives south and allows cold air to come down over the continent. Sometimes the air is less cold, sometimes very cold. Accompanying the cold this time was wind to make conditions feel worse.

"The polar vortex is nothing new. It (doesn't) cause any harm to people — other than the allowing of cold air over us and whatever occurs with it."

The region has also been buffeted by high winds this month. Yankton and Vermillion recorded gusts of 53 miles per hour (mph) on Monday, while other parts of the region recorded wind gusts of 49 and 51 miles per hour.

While those winds were noteworthy, they weren't historic, Heitkamp said.

"These winds are not that unusual," he said. "These are associated with the Alberta clippers, which are fast-moving storm systems."

Today agreed that the January wind gusts are not uncommon for the Great Plains. However, the circumstances surrounding the winds have brought them more attention, he said.

"The (winds) have been accompanying very cold temperatures, which have made us notice them even more," he said. "The repeated numbers of these (Alberta clippers) have brought cold frequently along with winds. The overall pattern that is bringing drought in California is related to us getting the multiple clipper systems."

The region has also been blasted by blizzards, but the condition is not always caused by huge snowfall, Today said.

"Frequently, our blizzards in this area are not heavy snow events. They are light snow falling and/or picking up snow off the ground by strong winds, which cause the visibility reductions," he said.

"We usually tend to have decent
