Daily opinions from the P&D Sports Staff on local and national high school, college and pro sports.

Three of the main basketball teams we follow at the Press and Dakotan closely are: the University of South Dakota, Yankton High School and Mount Marty College. Over the past year, we have seen these three schools take the younger coaching approach, as all of them have hired an energetic younger coach that was an assistant on the staff of the previous coach. All three schools have taken criticism and scrutiny for their decisions, one way or another. Almost to the midway point of basketball season here in South Dakota, it's fair to say these three schools are headed in the right direction. Joey James has the Coyotes atop of the Summit League Conference with a 3-0 record in conference play. Honestly, how many of you out there would have thought the Coyotes would be in first place, at any point this season? As a die-hard Coyotes fan and student, I didn't know how the growing pains would fare with James in his first season. I like others was wrong, James has the Coyotes playing fundamentally sound basketball. He knows what he's doing. Next week will be the big test for the Coyotes, as they host second place North Dakota State and those pesky Jackrabbits from South Dakota State. If the Coyotes keep grinding out victories, we could see them make a run at the Summit League title in Sioux Falls. Not only that, but it could provide security for the "interim" tag on James' shirt. After a decent season last year, which saw the Yankton Bucks only one win away from their first state tournament since the days of Colton Iverson, Chris Haynes looks to bring his squad here this season. With a duo like Brady Hale and Reid Sawatzke, Haynes has opened up the offense, giving his players freedom on the court. That's something I have never seen in a Yankton basketball team. The Bucks have a winning record almost headed into February at 5-4. Can you name the last time that's happened? Haynes and the Bucks have brought excitement to the Summit Activities Center this winter. If the Bucks keep playing consistently, don't be shocked to see them playing deep in the state tournament in Rapid City in March. The Mount Marty Lancers have had their struggles this season. If you've gone to a game this season, at times, it could have been tough to watch. I could agree, but what makes what Andrew Baker has going with his Lancers special is the connection he has with his players. Never have I seen them give up on Baker, even down 20 or more points. These kids would fight to the death for Baker and that's what it takes to be winners. Give Baker a year or two to get more recruits into his program. They may not be atop the Great Plains Athletic Conference now, but watch out, because this young team is hungry and won't settle losing games for long. All three of these coaches are showing they have what it takes to succeed at the next level. It's cool, being an avid basketball fan, to go to these games and enjoy the teams I follow achieve the desired goals. We are halfway through the season, only time will tell if these young coaches have what it takes to make late season pushes for their teams to create some post-season enthusiasm in the Yankton area.

Area Basketball Teams Making Progress With Young Coaches
