Northwestern Victory A Signature Win In An Otherwise Tough Season For Lancer Women BY JEREMY HOECK

jeremy.hoeck@yankton.net Upsets are becoming a yearly staple for the Mount Marty College women's basketball team. I've told people time and again that the Lancers are due for a signature win over a highly-ranked team at least once per season. But never did I think the Lancer women would do what they did Wednesday night.

A team with all those injuries — eight in all this season — beating the No. 2-ranked squad in the country? Come on, guit foolin'. And yet, that's exactly what Mount Marty did to Northwestern, shocking the Red Raiders — a national title contender, by the way "It's about time we had some fun," head coach Tom Schlimgen Yeah, no kidding. If there was a team in the country that deserved for something good to happen to them, it was Mount Marty.

You've probably seen us at the Press & Dakotan use terms like "short-handed" and "injury-riddled" a bunch this season. But that doesn't even do justice to what the Lancers have fought in 2013-14. Here's the list of players that have either missed time with in-iury or will have been out the whole season; April Winne, Kelly Amundson, Holly Hegge, Raquel Sutera, Kieran O'Malley, Haley Froelich, Erica Dreckman and Kelsev Schmidt, And I'm probably forgetting a couple.

Granted, Holly and Sutera are back (and played big roles

Wednesday night), but you're telling me a team without that talent is going to beat one of the best programs in the country?

That's why, to me, what Mount Marty did was more impressive than any other upset victory, or heck, any NAIA National Tournament appearance.

This team, even without those injuries, was certainly not a 1-12 conference squad. Not a chance. But a top-5 giant-killer?

Just imagine being a player on the team, realizing that in many ways, you're not going anywhere this season. Wouldn't it just be easier to coast to the finish? Sure, you compete and you try to win, but you don't expect anything special. And that's what Wednesday night was. Special.
