COLDER TEMPERATURES COMING

Up next, the cold. A high-pressure system over Canada is expected to move toward the Plains on Wednesday and then slide east, bringing unusually frigid temperatures to the eastern two-thirds of the U.S., meteorologist Jamie Enders said.

Parts of Georgia could see low temperatures Wednesday in the teens, and northern Florida is expected to be at or below freezing. From the Dakotas across the Midwest and into the Ohio Valley, temperatures are likely to be below zero.

Come Thursday, New York City will "be lucky if it hits 20" with lows near 10 degrees, according to Michael Musher with the Weather Service's Weather Prediction Center.

Officials in the coldest areas are urging residents to bundle up to guard against hypothermia and exercise caution while driving. In Detroit and across Illinois, warming centers have opened to provide temporary relief from the cold.

curing since 1994," he said. "Usually there's an issue that's discovered during our routine inspections, and we make a recommendation to the county to place rock under the bridge. What happens at that point is, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers is contacted and, in all cases, a permit is obtained from the Corps of Engineers. ... It's called a 'Nationwide Three' which is a maintenance permit. Basically they're looking at this as a maintenance item that is necessary for the protection of the bridge and the ongoing use of the bridge."

TRAVEL TROUBLES LIKELY

The Weather Service warns that snow-covered roads and reduced visibility will create poor travel conditions in many areas Tuesday. Even after most snowfall has ended, increasing winds Tuesday could result in drifting snow.

At Chicago's O'Hare International Airport on Monday night, airlines were reporting delays of 30 minutes for incoming and outbound flights and had canceled more than 230 flights, according to the city's Aviation Department. At Midway International Airport, about three dozen flights were delayed.

In South Dakota, road conditions "are going to be deteriorating very rapidly," said Mike Gillispie, a weather service meteorologist in Sioux Falls.

"If you don't have to be out and about, it's a good time to stay indoors," he said.

RELIEF IS IN SIGHT

Temperatures are expected to be lower than normal for days but could rise a bit by the end of the week.

"We have cold temperatures, but it's not like it never happened before," said Bob Oravec, a meteorologist with the Weather Prediction Center. "It's typical for an Arctic outbreak."

Tuesday's meeting, but will be present for the Commission's next meeting.

The bulk of committee assignments will be saved for the commission's next meeting.

Tuesday also saw the election of Woods as chairman and Commissioner Donna Freng as vice-chair.

Woods said it was an unexpected designation.

"It's an honor," Woods said. "It was a surprise, but look forward to the challenge to lead this."

He added that he hopes to rotate leadership duties as time goes along.

"I believe all of us are good leaders up here," he said. "What I believe is that we should rotate this every year so everybody has an opportunity to be in this leadership position."

Woods said he's looking at the Fleeg's Bridge as one of the most pressing issues the county has.

"The Fleeg's Bridge is already the first point of issue and that's going to be a big expense to the county — one that needs a lot more research and one that we need to figure out what the best course of action and when the right time to do it (is)," he said.

He added that economic development will also be a major goal of the new commission.

"Economic development was one of the big driving issues when I was campaigning and I'll still keep that going forward," he said. "Without that development, our county doesn't grow and thrive."

In other business, the commission:

- * Approved the 2015 calendar.
- * Approved a variance and a conditional use permit.
- * Heard testimony on veteran's preference in hiring.

Pipeline

The company's proposed Keystone XL pipeline would run from Montana through nine counties in South Dakota — Harding, Butte, Perkins, Meade, Pennington, Haakon, Jones, Lyman and Tripp — and into Nebraska. The South Dakota segment would be 313 miles.

Thomasina Real Bird, a lawyer representing the Yankton Sioux Tribe, said TransCanada needs a new permit because of the changes proposed by the company. She said state law doesn't allow a permit to be changed after it is issued.

But Bill Taylor, a lawyer representing TransCanada, said the changes include adding an "on-ramp" for oil from the Williston basin, more safety valves, lower capacity and lower pressure.

Dollar

erupted in 2008.

The dollar's rise has been fueled by a dim outlook for the global economy. Europe is muddling through a slow-down, and accordingly, the dollar has appreciated roughly 12 percent against the euro in the past year.

Japan is mired in a recession, while Brazil just crawled out of one. The Japanese yen has shed about 16 percent of its value against the dollar in the past 12 months, the Brazilian real about 13 percent. In Russia, the ruble's collapse has left homeowners struggling to repay their dollar-denominated mortgages.

All of that spills over into other markets. Investors seeking to escape the turmoil crowded into U.S. Treasury on Tuesday, causing the yield on the 10-year note to dip below 2 percent.

Crude oil prices fell more than 4 percent to under $48 a barrel. And the Standard & Poor's 500 stock index declined nearly 1 percent amid fears about the global economy.

Here are five economic sectors that could be reshaped by a stronger dollar and the global sluggishness:

OIL PRICES

Crude oil prices have more than halved from $107 a barrel since June. The global appetite for petroleum has diminished because of the worldwide economic slowdown, which extends to commodity-hungry nations such as China. Meanwhile, oil rigs in countries such as Saudi Arabia, which are competing for market share, are pumping out oil anyway. As a rule, continued supply and falling demand cause lower prices.

But the U.S. dollar also plays into this trend. Financial markets price oil in dollars. This gives petroleum a uniquely inverse relationship with the mighty buck. When oil prices fall, the U.S. dollar often rises against other currencies. As a result, Americans are reaping more of the benefits at the gasoline pump from falling oil prices than are the German, French or Portuguese consumers who buy their gas in euros.

CONSUMER SPENDING

Gasoline is a must in most family budgets. So when prices at the pump fall — and they're down a third over the past year nationwide to $2.19 a gallon, according to AAA — people can direct that spending elsewhere. They can splurge on a winter jacket, an SUV or an evening out at a restaurant.

But that increased spending usually lags.

"It takes time for people to realize the extent to which their finances have been improved by the drop in gas prices and for them to be convinced the gain will last, and finally for the money to be spent," said Ian Shepherdson, chief economist at Pantheon Macroeconomics.

U.S. consumer spending rose 3.2 percent during the July-September quarter of 2014. Shepherdson forecasts that it will top 4 percent in the first quarter of 2015 because of the boost from cheaper gas.

INFLATION

When consumer spending surges, higher inflation usually follows. But not necessarily this time.

U.S. consumer prices will likely be flat in 2015 — unchanged on average at a 0 percent, predicts Kevin Logan, chief U.S. economist at HSBC Securities. This would be due largely to falling oil prices, with an assist from a stronger dollar making foreign-made imports cheaper for American shoppers and businesses. The rising exchange rate causes denim from Osaka, Japan, that was originally priced in yen to become more of a bargain at U.S. boutiques. Prices have already fallen for vehicle imports.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE

Fed Chair Janet Yellen has hinted that the U.S. central bank may lift the federal funds rate from its near-zero level at some point in 2015. That rate has been at near-zero since the financial crisis in 2008 and ensuing global recession put the Fed on an emergency footing. The Fed usually would raise the rate as jobs return and inflationary pressures increase. The unemployment rate has plunged to 5.8 percent from 6.7 percent at the start of 2014.
