time helping out those in need with his music and that he makes it a point to see that all of the money earned from these benefits goes to those who need it.

"I've been doing these fundraisers for people in need," he said. "I started my first one in 1994 and we're at 100, give or take. All of these have been good fundraisers where (the money) won't go to corporate, it goes to people. If it goes right to the people who need it, I'm willing to do it."

But Rowland says he has more personal reasons for getting involved with fundraisers - he's been in this position himself.

"I've been in this situation three times - not with fires - but I had a plane crash that killed my family - killed my wife and 17-month-old boy. I had another wife here recently that in 2013 died of cancer and I didn't have any money to help her out and pay for everything. Then I had cancer in 2006 and I lost an airplane, I lost a bass boat, I lost my house, at the time I had a brand new truck that was 6-months old so that's kind of where my story goes back to. ... I've always thought that nobody should ever have to go through this."

Monetary donations are being handled through First National Bank in Yankton.

Canadian Soldiers Exchange Fire With ISIS In Iraq

TORONTO (AP) — Canadian soldiers opened fire on Islamic State group extremists in Iraq over the last week in what was apparently the first ground fire-fight between Western troops and ISIS.

Brig-Gen. Michael Rouleau, commander of special operations command, said Monday the soldiers were visiting front-line positions with Kurdish pesh-merga forces when they came under mortar and machine-gun fire. He said the Canadian soldiers fired back in self-defense.

The Canadian special forces soldiers, whose job is to train and advise the Iraqi military in their battle against the Islamic State group, were at the front to help plan an Iraqi operation. Rouleau said the Canadians used sniper fire and "neutralized" the machine gun and mortar without taking any casualties.

"My troops had completed a planning session with senior Iraqi leaders several kilometers behind the front lines," Rouleau said. "When they moved forward to confirm the planning at the front lines in order to visualize what they had discussed over a map, they came under immediate and effective mortar and machine gun fire."

The general said that while Canadian soldiers are not participating in active combat, they have the right to fire back if fired upon.

"This is the first time this has happened since our arrival and our reaction is wholly consistent with the inherent right of self-defense," Rouleau said in a briefing to reporters in Ottawa.

Rouleau and other Canadian officials declined to say where it happened. They cited operational security.

Canada is among dozens of countries that have joined the U.S.-led coalition fighting the Islamic State militant group.

Canada has 69 special forces soldiers there in what the Canadian government has described as a training and advisory role. Rouleau said they do about 80 percent of their training and advising well behind the front lines and about 20 percent right at the front lines.
