House OKs Sweeping Financial Regulations

BY JIM KUHNHENN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Nearly two years after a Wall Street meltdown left the economy reeling, the House on Wednesday passed a massive overhaul of financial regulations that would extend the government's reach from storefront thrifts to the executive suites of Manhattan. Senate support for the far-reaching bill remained in flux, however. The Senate was forced to delay its vote to mid-July, denying President Barack Obama a victory before Independence Day. Democrats struggled to secure the votes of a handful of Republican senators even after meeting their demands and backing down on a $19 billion tax on big banks and hedge funds.

The legislation, swelling to more than 2,000 pages, would rewrite the nation's regulatory books. Simple supermarket purchases and exotic derivatives trades would be subject to new laws. And the entire financial system would be placed on a risk watch in hopes of thwarting the next threat of a financial crisis.

Obama hailed the vote as "a victory for every American who has been affected by the recklessness and irresponsibility that led to the loss of millions of jobs and trillions in wealth."

The 237-192 House tally broke largely along party lines but attracted more support than in December when no Republicans voted for the House version of the bill. The new legislation combines the House bill with one passed by the Senate last month.

"Today, I rise with a clear message that the party is over," House Speaker Nancy Pelosi declared. "No longer again will recklessness on Wall Street cause joblessness on Main Street. No longer will the risky behavior of the few threaten the financial stability of our families, our businesses and our economy as a whole."

Republicans portrayed the bill as a vast overreach of government power that would do little to prevent future bailouts of failing financial institutions. They complained that it failed to place tighter restrictions on Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, the mortgage giants forced into huge federal bailouts after their questionable lending helped trigger the housing and economic meltdowns.

"This legislation is a clear attack on capital formation in America," said Rep. Eric Cantor of Virginia, the second-ranking House Republican. "It purports to prevent the next financial crisis, but it does so by vastly expanding the power of the same regulators who failed to stop the last one."

Only three Republicans voted for the bill: Joseph Cao of Louisiana, Mike Castle of Delaware and Walter Jones of North Carolina. Nineteen Democrats voted against it, eight fewer than in December.

As predictable as the House vote may have been, the Senate was in uncharted territory.

House and Senate negotiators were forced to reconvene Tuesday to remove a $19 billion tax on large banks and hedge funds, hoping to overcome objections from Sens. Scott Brown, Susan Collins and Olympia Snowe, all Republicans who voted for the Senate version last month.

Democrats inserted the tax late last week as they assembled a combined House-Senate bill, catching big banks by surprise. Brown was the first to complain and threatened to vote against the bill if the tax remained in the final measure.

Desperate to hold at least 60 votes to beat back procedural hurdles, House Financial Services Committee Chairman Barney Frank, Senate Banking Committee Chairman Chris Dodd and Obama administration officials scrambled to drop the tax and devise another means of financing the bill's cost.

In the end, House and Senate negotiators, voting along party lines, agreed to pay for the bill with $11 billion generated by ending the unpopular Troubled Asset Relief Program — the $700 billion bank bailout created in the fall of 2008 at the height of the financial scare.

They also agreed to increase premium rates paid by commercial banks to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. to insure bank deposits. The increase would not affect banks with assets under $10 billion.

On Wednesday, Collins issued a statement saying she was now inclined to vote for the bill. But Brown remained uncommitted, saying he needed Congress' weeklong July 4 recess to examine the details of the bill. He did credit Dodd for "thinking outside the box" in finding an alternative.

Snowe late Wednesday said she, too, wanted to review the bill, but said that the last-minute change put the bill "in a much better position."

NATION/WORD DIGEST

Obama Trying To Bring Jobs Back

RACINE, Wis. (AP) — President Barack Obama says the global economy is forcing the U.S. to compete "like never before" with other countries and that his administration is moving on many fronts to bring jobs back home.

Obama's administration is spending billions of dollars on education and training as well as on improving the infrastructure — such as roads and bridges but also on broadband and other technologies.

Obama says a new health care law will put the brakes on health care costs and help businesses grow and hire workers. He says investments in research and development, tax code changes and fairer trade also will help bring jobs back to a country where unemployment is near 10 percent.

Obama spoke Wednesday at a town hall meeting in Racine, Wis.

Obama: Attacking Debt Will Be Project

RACINE, Wis. (AP) — President Barack Obama says the United States has to wean itself from its habit of using the national "credit card" and leaving future generations to pay the bill.

Obama told a town meeting in Wisconsin on Wednesday that curbing the deficit is going to be "our project" for the next few years.

But the president also said that the biggest problem is not the government's stimulus spending or even the bailouts of Wall Street and automakers, but the long-term spending on health care and other benefits. Obama said the trick will be reining those in gradually without hurting people who depend on them.

Gap Among Native American Students

(AP) — Native American students at schools overseen by the federal Bureau of Indian Education performed significantly worse on national standardized tests in reading and math compared with those in public schools.

The division operates 59 schools and oversees another 124 that are run by tribes. A U.S. Department of Education report released Wednesday found that Native American students at these schools scored 20 points lower in fourth grade math on the National Assessment of Educational Progress in 2009. A similar achievement gap was seen in reading.

Researchers say poverty, difficulty in placing teachers in tribal areas and less access to resources compared with public schools contribute to the gap.

House Panel Denies Aid To War

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House foreign aid panel has voted to cut off almost $4 billion in aid to the government of Afghanistan pending an investigation into charges that Afghan officials are blocking corruption probes and huge amounts of foreign aid is being stolen.

The bipartisan move comes after The Washington Post alleged that top officials in President Hamid Karzai's government were blocking corruption probes of political allies and that Afghan powerbrokers are moving millions of dollars out of the country.

Lawmakers are instead demanding that the Government Accountability Office conduct an audit of billions of dollars of past U.S. aid.

The moves came as the appropriations panel approved a $53 billion measure funding foreign aid for the upcoming budget year.

Layoffs Of Census Workers Will Distort Jobs Data

BY CHRISTOPHER S. RUGABER
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON — For the first time in six months, the federal unemployment report to be released Friday will likely show a net loss of jobs.

But hold off on the panic button. It's true that employers are expected to have cut more than 100,000 jobs in June. But that figure, if accurate, will be deceptive. It will reflect the end of up to 250,000 temporary census jobs. The real focus Friday will be on how many net jobs private employers created.

"People are looking past the census effect," said Alec Phillips, an economist at Goldman Sachs.

Analysts predict private businesses added 112,000 jobs in June, according to a survey by Thomson Reuters. That would be a healthy rebound from May's 41,000 gain. But it's far from enough to signal a roaring recovery or rapidly reduce the unemployment rate, now at 9.7 percent. It would take a net gain of around 200,000 jobs a month to quickly reduce that rate.

The plunge in census jobs comes just a month after the government added nearly a half-million people to conduct door-to-door visits and other tasks. The census began hiring more workers last year. It added about 500,000 this spring.

The rapid switch from hiring to firing reflects the short-term nature of census jobs. Most are part time and last six to eight weeks.

The decline in census workers isn't expected to have much effect on the jobless rate. Analysts predict the rate will edge up to 9.8 percent in June from 9.7 percent in May. In part, that's because Phillips estimates that about half the temporary census hires also held other jobs. So they won't be counted as unemployed once their census job ends.

The elimination of 250,000 census jobs could lower personal income slightly in June, according to Nigel Gault, chief U.S. economist at IHS Global Insight. But "it's minor relative to a lot of other things going on," he said.

Employers boosted pay in May. Employees also worked more hours. Together, that lifted income by a healthy 0.5 percent last month, the Commerce Department said earlier this week.

But other recent reports have raised fears that the economic recovery is stalling.

A sharp drop in consumer confidence sent stocks tumbling Tuesday — and the selling continued Wednesday. Less-confident consumers could be in their spending, already at modest levels.

Other factors have also rattled nerves. China's economy is slowing, the U.S. housing market is sputtering and leaders of the world's richer nations have pledged sharp cuts in their deficits.

Given the sour outlook, a June employment report that showed a net gain of 112,000 private-sector jobs would be "greeted with a mild sigh of relief," Gault said. Such a gain would suggest the recovery is still on track, he said, and could help restore consumer confidence and spending.

On the other hand, Friday's jobs report might deliver a disappointing surprise. One hint that it might: Payroll company ADP said Wednesday that its tally of private sector employment showed a gain of only 13,000 jobs in June. That was below the 60,000 that economists had expected. And it compared with a gain of 57,000 the previous month.
