brother and role model," he reflected. "With my band, I'm the peacemaker, and in the Rathbone family, I'm the joker."

And also the gallant who, when his older sisters beat him up (and he asked, "Dad, what do I do?"), followed his dad's advice: "Just take it." Credit Dad for Rathbone's ladies-first manners.

"I'm from Texas and really am a Southern gentleman," he said. His heritage helped inform his interpretation of Jasper, whose Eclipse flashbacks reveal that his vampire conversion came while in the Texas cavalry during the Civil War. "I channeled my ancestor a bit," he said.

Commonalities between Jasper and Sokka? "Both are warriors at heart and each sticks up for those he loves." Differences? "Jasper is a 200-year-old vampire and Sokka is a 17-year-old boy."

Rathbone loved his martial-arts training for "Airbender": "I got to wield double swords! And got to have that Keanu 'Matrix' moment: 'Hey, I know kung fu!'"

Though the actor observed his parents' rules about not watching TV, "I was always a cinephile. The first movie I snuck off to see was 'Terminator 2.'"

For his last two years of high school, Rathbone attended the prestigious Interlochen Arts Academy in Michigan, alma mater of Norah Jones, where he studied acting and music.

"Then I was accepted at the Royal Scottish Academy to study classical theater," he recalled. "But the summer before I was to start, on a lark I moved to L.A. and then decided to take a gap year." He got small gigs (a one-shot as an interviewer on television's "Disney 411") which led to bigger gigs (TV's "Beautiful People") which led to here.

"The point of going to college was to learn what I wanted to do and start working, and there I was, knowing what I wanted to do and already working."

He does not regret his decision to bypass higher education. "Once you find your passion, life is great."
