Attorney: 'Barefoot Bandit' Just An Immature Kid

BY GEORGE TIBBITTS
 Associated Press Writer

SEATTLE — His attorney says the "Barefoot Bandit," accused of dozens of thefts from Washington state to the Caribbean, is a likable but immature kid.

The U.S. attorney in Seattle calls Colton Harris-Moore, 19, a menace who, if set free, would pick up his two-year crime spree where he left off.

For his part, Harris-Moore says he's no hero and nobody's role model.

What's indisputable is he's a federal prisoner after opting not to seek bail during an eight-minute court appearance Thursday.

Appearing before U.S. Magistrate Judge Brian Tsuchida, Harris-Moore did not contest his detention and waived his right to a preliminary hearing. His next court appearance will likely come after a grand jury indictment.

Dressed in tan, jail-issued shirt and pants, Harris-Moore spoke quietly with attorney John Henry Browne and didn't smile during the hearing. He softly answered "yes" several times when Tsuchida asked him if he understood the charge against him and that he would remain in custody.

He is charged with one count of interstate transportation of stolen property in the theft last year of a plane from Idaho's panhandle that crashed north of Seattle. It carries a maximum 10-year prison sentence if convicted.

The FBI has said DNA matching his was found on the plane. Agents say bare footprints also were found nearby along with Harris-Moore's fingerprint on a stolen mirror.

Police dubbed him the "Barefoot Bandit" because bare footprints were found at several scenes where he's suspected of committing crimes. In February, chalk-outlined feet were found on the floor of a burglarized grocery store in Washington's San Juan Islands.

The U.S. attorney's office says Harris-Moore is the primary suspect in at least 80 crimes committed since he escaped from a group home near Seattle in April 2008. They include stealing five airplanes, three of which were wrecked in crash landings, dozens of break-ins at homes and businesses, and the theft of cash, food, electronics, firearms, cars and boats across nine states, British Columbia and the Bahamas.

His escapades have some lauding him as an authority-mocking folk hero. He has more than 90,000 followers on a Facebook fan page.

But Browne says Harris-Moore told him he doesn't want to be considered a hero and was often scared while on the lam. "He wants kids and everybody to understand that what he did was not fun," Browne said.

His client comes across as a polite and intelligent young man, but "not terribly mature," Browne said.

"My first impression is, he's really a kid."

U.S. Attorney Jenny Durkan called Harris-Moore "a significant danger to the community" and an "extreme" flight risk.

"Nothing should be glorified," said Durkan, who added that the investigation was ongoing and more charges against Harris-Moore and other people might be forthcoming. "There's nothing entertaining about these charges."

Browne said he did not contest Harris-Moore's detention because pending charges elsewhere would "start a traveling road show."

Although Browne said it's possible all potential charges against his client might be pulled together into one trial, he and Durkan said that is unlikely, given the large number of jurisdictions involved.

In addition to Washington state and Idaho, Harris-Moore is being investigated for crimes in Oregon, Illinois, Indiana, Wyoming, South Dakota, Nebraska and Iowa.

He was caught July 10 in the Bahamas, a week after authorities said he crash-landed an airplane stolen from an Indiana airport. Bahamian authorities launched a manhunt and arrested him as he tried to flee in a boat.

A Note of Gratitude

On the July 10th weekend when Yankton experienced extreme weather, lightning struck the electrical box at our building in town and started a fire. If not for the concerned 911 calls from fellow citizens and the excellent response time of both the police and fire departments, the building housing Monta's Framing and Florals would have burned down. Instead the damage was confined to a "fried" electrical panel and charred exterior wood. Our special thanks go to: Yankton Fire Department and Police Department, 911 callers: Cathy at LilyCrest, our tenants living above Monta's, and others we do not know by name who also reported the fire.
