Fallen Neb. Rail Bridge Now Out Of Elkhorn River

Bridge That Killed Worker Still Under Repair

NORFOLK, Neb. (AP) — A northeast Nebraska railroad bridge that collapsed during this spring's flooding is being repaired, but it's not clear when it will be ready.

The Nebraska Central Railroad bridge collapsed in June because of flooding along the Elkhorn River and killed a worker standing on the bridge.

Earlier this week, both of the metal bridge spans were pulled out of the river. Railroad spokesman Chad Korth says the spans are damaged but should be salvageable.

Now that the bridge spans are out of the river, the support system for the bridge can be rebuilt.

The bridge provided Norfolk's only link to the main Union Pacific rail line, so several businesses have had to truck in supplies since the flooding.

"Talk about a cardio exercise!" Cull said as he hopped off the pillow. "I was on there for a minute, and I'm breathing harder than if I had run for 10 miles. It's crazy."

Cull said the idea was to make the KOA facility a "destination campground."

"It's such a cool project," he said. "All the things we're going to have for campers is incredible. We've got pretty much everything to make it a real destination."

In addition to the previously-mentioned amenities, Cull points out that a building at the site will house showers, bathrooms, a convenience store, an arcade room and a video lottery area. A pavilion will also be used to hold activities.

On the NFAA grounds adjacent to the campground, there are four 28-target field archery courses, a trap range, a tennis court, and a pond for fishing.

The project will represent an investment of more than $2 million, Cull said.

"The whole idea is to bring more people to town," he stated.

James added, "Look at the money these campers are going to spend in town. They've got to buy fuel, food and will also spend money on recreational opportunities."

A manager will live in a lodge on the campground, and it is expected to be open annually from March through December.

Cull believes hunters will be among those who use it during the traditional camping off-season.

"The operation is set up so it can run in harsh winters," Cull said. "The intent is to be open as long as we can profitably do so. The bottom line right now is to keep our heads above water financially. We've got a big investment here."

A Classic Treat On Center Stage

BY BARBARA CHRISTENSEN

Yankton

On Monday night I went to the first dress rehearsal of "My Fair Lady." I only planned to pop in for a few minutes because, of course, like everyone, I've seen the show several times. Wrong! I was so enchanted that I stayed for the whole thing.

The show was so well acted, and so well done. I have been to opening nights that were less finished than this show was at their first dress rehearsal. The production is familiar because it is a classic, but oh my! What a treat!

You will enjoy it thoroughly. The music, the characters, the set... Unless you have total recall — which I apparently do not — it will seem as new as a fresh ice cream cone and just as refreshing.

Ellie Tieszen is a marvelous Eliza — one of the best you'll see anywhere. Jake Christensen is a pompous Henry Higgins twit who suffers his come-uppance with a bafflement that is flawlessly conveyed. It is a delight to see these two interact. It is also a delight to see them so appropriately cast. At last a Henry Higgins who doesn't come off as a slightly "dirty old man." I always had that feeling about Rex Harrison, I'm sorry to say.

The supporting cast is fun and extremely well cast, as well as marvelous to watch. The adults are just that — adults, not kids pretending to be adults. Everyone is 100 percent in character and totally winsome.

The music surprises you because it is familiar. We all know the songs, but we have forgotten how well they move the show along and what fun they are to hear and remember.

Andy Henrickson, the director, can take many bows for this production. Lewis and Clark Theater can do so as well. This is a community theatre home run, right out of the ball park.

Call 605-665-4711 for your reservations right now, and get your bottom into a seat. Then enjoy, enjoy, ENJOY!
