Do All Mini Coopers Do This?

BY TOM AND RAY MAGLIOZZI
King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Dear Tom and Ray:
I have a 2009 Mini Cooper that has a weird, intermittent problem. When I am idling — like at a stoplight — I hear a slight bump underneath the car. It's as if a mechanic has rolled under the car and sat up, banging his head on the undercarriage. And it comes every 10 seconds ... exactly ... like clockwork. The really weird thing is that after I turn off the car completely, it will continue for roughly a minute and then finish off with three bumps: "ba-dump-bump." It's all very soft and hard to hear, but I can hear it. What is it? — Charles

RAY: I know exactly the sound you're talking about, Charles. It's like when my brother slides under a car to take a nap, and then wakes up and hits his head. Only with my brother, he stirs every 10 hours, not every 10 seconds.

TOM: You know how dealers often will try to get rid of you by saying, "They all do that, Charles? Well, they all do that."

RAY: It's part of the evaporative emissions

system on this car. All modern cars have a system that traps gasoline vapors so they don't escape into the air and create smog. What you're hearing is an air pump that's part of this car's self-diagnostic system.

TOM: When the car is at idle, every 10 seconds it pumps a burst of air into the evaporative emissions system and then tests the pressure to make sure no vapors are leaking out. And yes, it even continues for a minute after you shut off the engine, because the system remains under pressure for a bit.

RAY: If the sensor in the system were to detect a drop in pressure, it would turn on your "check engine" light, letting you know that there was a problem.

TOM: In fact, it's called the DMTL pump. Mini says it stands for "Diagnostic Module Tank Leak." But I think it's "Don't Make That Light" come on!

Changing your oil regularly is the cheapest insurance you can buy for your car, but how often should you change it? ## Publication Cites USD For Out-Of-State Affordability VERMILLION — When it comes to tuition and fees for out-of-state students, The University of South Dakota is one of the nation's most affordable public colleges, according to the U.S. News and World Report.

While many students assume the financial relief comes by looking at colleges close to home, the data released by U.S. News shows that there are schools that offer competitive out-of-state tuition packages that rival many universities' in-state offerings.

In an analysis of data reported by U.S. News, USD ranked in the top 10 of least expensive public schools for out-of-state students for the 2010-11 school year. Among the 452 public institutions surveyed for their undergraduate programs, the average for out-of-state students was $16,678. USD's average of $8,259 (tuition and fees) cut that in half making it one of the least expensive public universities for out-of-state students.

New Mexico Highlands University is the nation's least expensive public school for out-of-state students ($4,632) followed by Minnesota State University-Moorhead ($6,918) and Minot State University ($7,047). Of the top 10 schools ranked by U.S. News, eight are located in Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota. The five military academies, which charge $0 in tuition and fees in return for postgraduate service, were excluded.

Criteria in selecting the nation's least expensive public schools for out-of-state students was based on a U.S. News survey of more than 1,700 colleges and universities for the publication's 2010 survey of undergraduate programs. Schools self-reported myriad data regarding their academic programs and the makeup of their student body. While U.S. News uses most of this data to rank schools for its annual Best Colleges rankings; the data can also be used for other lists.
