Twins' Morneau Regaining Strength After Surgery
MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Twins first baseman Justin Morneau will try some light activities over the next two weeks, another step in his recovery from surgery to remove a fragment of a herniated disk from his neck.

Morneau had the operation on Wednesday, and Twins trainer Rick McWane said Friday doctors "were very happy with the outcome," and the slugger was already starting to regain some strength.

"The fact that his strength had already gotten better is a very good sign and encouraging," McWane said. Morneau was placed on the 15-day disabled list last month with a strained left wrist.

Dakota Wizards Replacing Head Coach

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) — The NBA Development League team in Bismarck is replacing its head coach.

The ouster of Rory White this week came a day after officials announced the Dakota Wizards had been bought by the Golden State Warriors. The general manager of the NBA team, Larry Riley, tells The Bismarck Tribune that the team wants to bring in a Wizards coach who will mesh well with the Warriors' new head coach, Mark Jackson.

Riley says there were "no negative issues" with White.

White coached the Wizards for two seasons, compiling a 48-52 record. He says he was told the Warriors wanted to "start everything fresh."

Riley says there is no timeline for hiring a new coach.

17-and-under travel teams that includes a regular season and concludes with a 24-team championship at the mid-July Peach Jam in North Augusta, S.C.

"We've definitely put more of an emphasis on skills development," said Vince Baldwin, Nike's elite youth director of scouting. "Kids were playing way too many meaningless games."

Like Garrett, who attended the St. Louis event as a parent, Baldwin said the summer circuit has a valuable, if misunderstood, role, especially for college programs with smaller recruiting budgets.

"It hurts the universities and it hurts the kids," he said, referring to the likely reduction in the July evaluation period. "Colleges will make more mistakes about who they recruit. And kids will get overlooked."

Similar to members of select soccer programs or summer baseball all-star teams, the basketball players at summer all-star camps are there to match their skills against other top talent, Baldwin said. Most high school games can't provide that sort of environment.

"It's about the competition," he said. "You can watch them compete against other Division I athletes. If you watch a kid at his high school, he might be the only Division I athlete on the court."

Burke acknowledged that "there are some good things to come out of the camps." But he also stands firmly behind the NCAA's effort to keep those influences in check.

"There are way too many people out there ... selling a vision that only a few will realize," he said.

"I think they'll feel they came home in some ways," Delany said.

Nebraska never felt at home in the Big 12. Osborne has said as much.

The perception in Nebraska was that Texas held too much political control from Day 1.
