Obama

Obama renewed his stand that any deal must include not only spending cuts but also new revenue — tax increases vehemently ruled out by many Republicans in Congress. "We need to come together over the next two weeks to reach a deal that reduces the deficit and upholds the full faith and credit of the United States government and the credit of the American people," Obama said at the White House. "We've made progress, and I believe that greater progress is within sight, but I don't want to fool anybody — we still have to work through some real differences," the president said. He said congressional leaders from the House and Senate, both Republicans and Democrats, were being invited to meet on the issue Thursday at the White House. That would bring the top eight lawmakers together with Obama, Vice President Joe Biden and top administration financial officials. Obama spoke as the Aug. 2 deadline for raising the nation's borrowing limit came closer. Experts say lawmakers must waste no time in making a deal if they are to have any chance of getting it finalized and passed through both chambers of Congress in time. Despite the president's optimism, it remained unclear where compromise could be found. Republicans are insisting they will not vote to raise the debt limit without major spending cuts; Democrats are refusing to sign off on cuts of such magnitude without at least potentially throwing financial markets into turmoil. Many congressional Republicans indicate they're unconvinced that such scenarios would occur, and some administration officials worry that it could take a financial calamity before Congress acts. With the deadline nearing, the Senate canceled its July Fourth recess planned for this week. In discussions led by Vice President Joe Biden that broke off late last month, Republican and Democratic negotiators found more than $1 trillion in potential spending cuts over the coming decade, including reductions favored by both sides. A Democratic official said last week that of those cuts, roughly $200 billion would come mainly from savings from Medicaid and Medicare, the government health insurance programs for the poor and elderly. Another $200 billion would come from cuts in other automatically paid benefit programs, including farm subsidies. Another large chunk would come from cuts in discretionary spending that Congress approves every year.

the way of the boy, knocking him to the ground. In November, Lubbers told USD's campus newspaper, The Volante, that the incident was a simple misunderstanding between him and the boy's mother. Lubbers was chair of the department of Contemporary Media and Journalism at the time of the incident. He vacated the position Jan. 1, but still is a professor at the university. The case was set to go to a jury trial scheduled for May 23-24, but the trial was canceled May 23 when Lubbers pleaded no contest to the charges. Previous court appearances in the case were delayed in November, January and April. The Associated Press contributed to this report.
