Chris Evans plays Captain America in "Captain America: The First Avenger," from Paramount Pictures and Marvel Entertainment.

Actor Was Reluctant To Take On 'Captain America'

ORLANDO, Fla. — They didn't have to tell Chris Evans it was his "patriotic duty" to play Captain America in "Captain America: The First Avenger." But it almost came to that.

"I was saving that pitch for last," jokes Joe Johnston, the popcorn-picture specialist ("Jumanji," "Jurassic Park III") hired to turn the comic book into a movie. "Fortunately, I didn't have to play that card."

For many actors, landing the lead in an action franchise is a dream come true: financial security, name recognition and a big stroke to the ego. Evans, 30, and a veteran of the "Fantastic Four" movies, wasn't having it. "Extreme reluctance," is how he put it.

"It's the type of thing that represents a giant commitment," says Evans. "It's a six-picture deal and if the movies do well, we could be going back and forth between 'Captain America' and 'Avengers' movies, realistically, until I'm 40!"

Evans — in New York prepping to ring the opening bell at the New York Stock Exchange followed by an appearance of "Late Night With Jimmy Fallon" — laughs.

"That's a long ways away, and I think it's hard for anyone to plan the next 10 years of their life like that. Who knows what your passion will be in two years, five years?" If all of a sudden I wanted to stop acting, or just take a break, but you just can't."

Summoned to play the earnest "first Avenger," that World War II super-soldier Captain America, Evans turned Marvel Entertainment down flat. So Johnston worked around that.

"We screen-tested about a dozen guys," Johnston recalls. "At one point, one of us said, 'Man, I wish this guy was a little more like Chris Evans.' We kept looking and looking and screen testing.

"They went back to him again, and he said 'No' again.

"Finally, I said to the Marvel guys, 'Look, he said he doesn't want to do it. I get it. But have him come in to the art department and look at the designs. We'll just chat. No screen tests. Just come take a look."

"He finally came in and took a look around, all this fantastic art of what the picture was going to look like — by Marvel artists, people we brought in like this German car designer, Daniel Simon, who did all our vehicles including that great looking Bugatti you see in the movie."

Evans mulled the idea over. Again.

"In the end, I decided that the reason I was turning this down was fear," Evans says. "I told Joe, 'Never turn down something because you're afraid of it.'"

Evans says he knew that with Marvel spending the money on a very strong supporting cast (Hugo Weaving is the Nazi villain, Stanley Tucci and Toby Jones are scientists, Tommy Lee Jones is Captain America's crusty commanding officer) that he'd be in good hands. What he wasn't sure of was his ability to tone down his funny, cocky swagger, "you know, my bread and butter."

"People were generally pleased with the anointment of Evans as Cap," says Clint Morris, editor of the popular film buff's website moviehole.net.

Jim Littler of comicbookmovie.com agrees: "The consensus is that he's the right guy for the part."

The swagger wasn't an issue. Instead, comic-book fans were concerned that Evans has already
