

Kingsway Christian Vacation Bible School Slated

Kingsway Christian Church invites kids to "Babylon: Daniel's Courage in Captivity" this year's Vacation Bible School theme. It will be held Sunday, July 22, through Thursday, July 26, from 6:30-8:30 p.m. each evening. Registration and check-in will begin at 6 p.m. Sunday evening. Kids will step back in time at Babylon, exploring Daniel's adventures as a captive in a foreign land. They will visit Daniel, make fun Babylon-themed crafts, sing catchy songs, play teamwork-building games, dig into Bible-times snacks, and collect Bible Memory Makers to remind them of God's Word. Plus, everyone learns to look for evidence of God all around them through something called God Sightings. Each day concludes at Celebration — a time of upbeat worship that gets everyone involved.

All kids from age 4 through fifth grade are invited to join the adventure. Pre-registration is encouraged. Register online at www.groupvbspro.com/vbs/hl/kingsway2012 or call 605-660-7537.

Struggles For A Meaningful Life

BY REV. LANCE LINDGREN
Pastor Vangen Lutheran Church

There are a multitude of movements around the world today, which struggle for human justice, safety, and health concerns. And when you look at the essence, the makeup of these movements, they all have one thing in common: the struggle for meaningful life.

This past spring, the Yankton Ministerial Association was made aware of a focus on stemming the influx of substance abuse (drugs, alcohol, synthetic drugs, and other dangerous substances) by youth in the community. It was heartening to note that school officials, law enforcement agencies, and other concerned organizations and individuals came together to address the synthetic drug situation. And I'm sure it was not intended to represent some "holier-than-thou" attitude or fussy moralism; nor should it ever be construed to be interpreted as that. While I was unable to attend the meetings that addressed the situation, I, along with fellow clergy are always concerned about such abuse by both youth and adults.

From a Judeo-Christian biblical perspective, human life is of critical importance. The late Catholic priest, theologian, and writer, Henri J.M. Nouwen, once said that, the importance of life of each human being needs to be affirmed. When we affirm life, it's not so much in making speeches, but by taking significant human actions to not abuse one's own life or someone else's.

God insists on the care of our lives, and the importance of such care on a daily basis, physically, mentally, and spiritually. This is evidenced by what the Apostle Paul says: that, "we are the temple of the living God; as God said, I will live in them and walk among them, and I will be their God..." (2 Corinthians 6:16b) Nowhere in Scripture do I find God intending human life to be used in an abusive manner!

God intends us to live a full and useful life that is capable of expressing and experiencing love and forgiveness in all that we do with ourselves, our loved ones, and other significant people in our lives. But, when we allow substance abuse to overwork our physical and mental well-being, our spiritual well-being becomes ignored, which dramatically starves us of regular compassionate expression on a daily basis!

It's God's desire that we (all of us — women, men, children; young and old alike) experience an immense, robust health of both body and spirit! If there is to be any "holiness" to accrue in our lives, it's in the ability to live deeply in the splendor and brilliance of God's design of being a responsible, caring, loving human being in this world — of which both (his world, and us) are His creation...

Trail Running Led To Spiritual Awakening

BY LESLIE BARKER GARCIA
© 2012 The Dallas Morning News

DALLAS — Maybe it happens at 3 a.m., when he trips on a tree root that his flashlight missed. Or when he feels yet another pebble stuck in his shoes. Or when he's so hungry or tired or sweating or shivering that he'd trade just about anything for a shower and a hamburger.

But at various points during the 9 or 20 or 25 hours it takes him to traipse through 50- or 100-mile trail runs, Matthew Crownover starts thinking about joy, about life, and about how his own travails at the moment can seem somewhat petty.

"Half the time I have tears in my eyes about my patients," says Crownover, who recently ran a 50-mile trail event in New Mexico's Jemez Mountains. "Wouldn't they love to be out here... (complaining) about a rock in their shoe?"

Crownover, 39, is a chaplain at Texas Health Presbyterian, working primarily on the oncology floor or with psychiatric patients. One evening, just before he was getting ready to go home, he received a call from labor and delivery. A woman was to be induced within an hour or so. What necessitated the call to Crownover was that her baby was dead.

So Crownover called upon on his experience — as a chaplain, as a father of four, as a trail runner. Knowing he needed sustenance before such an undertaking, he went to his office. He ate a can of ravioli, listened to NPR and rested. Then he went to the bedside of the woman dealing with the first stage of unspeakable sorrow.

Later, telling me about that night, he says, "I know not to try to be tough and brave and macho. You can't bull— your way through climbing a mountain in the middle of the night, and you can't bull— your way through someone in a terrible situation."

Crownover, who has been a hospital chaplain for 13 years, started out as a die-hard road (i.e. nontrail) runner. He kept an eye on his watch and his fingers crossed that nothing would go wrong during races. Then he started trail running — what he calls his spiritual awakening — and all that changed.

"When you run these ultras, something different is happening," he says. "You're stepping into this vulnerability. You know something is going to go wrong. There's an element of faith that's very different. You're playing with the 'let go and let God' aspect. You're trusting you'll get through it, just trusting it'll be OK."

"If you screw up, embrace these moments. Don't give in to fear, keep your sense of humor. All that comes up in ultramarathoning, and that's what I love about it."

Running for hours on end, sometimes in darkness and often alone, opened up a world of learning, of coming alive, he says. Instead of worrying what would happen to his 5K or 10K time, he started thinking about the basics: How would he navigate rushing water? How could he run down a slope without the jostled dirt and stones knocking him to his knees?

"All of that became like being a kid again, which is a deeply spiritual impulse," he says. "It's keeping that sense of curiosity and wonder. I have to pace myself, stay joyful, talk with friends, enjoy being out there. It's kind of like how you get through life, right?"

A fairly traditional sense of calling" led Crownover into the ministry, he tells me (after first saying, "Like any good Presbyterian, I have a complicated answer.") As he got older, he became interested in people of all faiths, as well as those with no faith at all.

A Dallas native, Crownover attended Austin College and Perkins School of Theology, then ecumenical seminary in Cuba for a year. He served as a chaplain at Parkland and Baylor, Texas, hospitals before coming to Presbyterian five years ago.

Dr. Kenneth Adams, medical director of inpatient rehabilitation at Presbyterian, appreciates Crownover's affinity for listening. The two only met a few months ago, but for several years Adams had read Crownover's pastoral notes in patients' folders.

"Sometimes he brings up issues we were unaware of," Adams says. One might be what a patient's church family is doing, perhaps. Or maybe the patient is depressed or suicidal.

"You have to sit with a patient to get that out."

When Crownover is working, he strives for an 80-to-20 ratio of listening to talking. So when he's not on chaplain duty, it seems as if all he has held inside comes out, in an effortless eloquence that begs not to be interrupted.

His thoughts — joy, trust, gratitude, "the whole becoming human thing" — drop into conversation as easily as ice cubes into a refreshing glass of water. Maybe that's honed by solitary hours of running with only his heartbeat and footfall and rushing water for rhythm; who can say?

"It keeps coming back to gratitude. It keeps coming back to paying attention to what I am called to be. I guess you could call it discernment. It's a great chance to be present."
