Ghost Tour Sponsored By Library, Museum

Do you know about the Ghosts of Yankton's past? If not, you will want to be on board Thursday, July 26, when the Yankton Community Library and the Dakota Territorial Museum team up to offer a Haunted History Tour as part of the adult/young adult summer reading program.

Attendees will gather at the museum at 610 Summit where you will have a brief opportunity to tour the Museum. At 7 p.m., you will board a Yankton Transit bus and Crystal Nelson, director of the Dakota Territorial Museum, will provide stories and lore of our local history as the bus travels throughout the city.

There is a cost for this event. Your seat(s) will only be reserved when you pay at the library by July 25. If the 7 p.m. tour fills, there will be a second tour at 8 p.m.

For further information about this or any library program, call 668-5275.

Back Packs Offered To Low-Income Families

The Contact Center will be taking applications for low-income families needing help with school back packs for their children for the coming school year.

Last year, 161 children were provided vouchers for back packs. This number was up from 2010. This year the Contact Center will be supplying the back pack again for grades K-8.

Families must sign up their children by Aug. 22. They may sign up by coming in to the contact office located in the County Government Center, lower level. Families must have an active SNAP Card to be eligible.

Funding for this project is provided by local donations. Any donations can be sent to the Contact Center, P O Box 675, Yankton, SD 57078.

Those needing help with school supplies can call ROCS-Rural Office of Community Services at 1-877-254-6110 for an application.

Engine Coolant Not Always Solution

BY TOM AND RAY MAGLIOZZI

King Features Syndicate

Dear Tom and Ray:

I am a rural mail carrier and have a question about engine coolants. As a mail carrier, I spend a tremendous amount of time on hot asphalt at very slow speeds, and often sitting still. Are there any engine coolants that are capable of making an engine run cooler? My engine runs a little hotter than I am comfortable with. It doesn't overheat, but it reaches higher temps than it does when traveling down the road at 55 mph. If no such coolant exists, are there any "tricks" that could be applied to get the desired result? -Josh

TOM: There's really nothing you can put in there to make it run cooler, Josh — unless you want to pack the radiator with blocks of dry ice.

RAY: It's more likely that your radiator has seen better days. So the first thing I'd suggest is having your radiator inspected and flow-tested. Make sure it's not corroded and that you're moving plenty of coolant through it.

TOM: You can have someone check your thermostat, too, to make sure it's opening correctly and isn't sticking. A sticky thermostat can make a car run hot in stop-and-go driving. So can a non-functioning cooling fan.

RAY: If all of that stuff checks out OK, your one other option is to install an auxiliary cooling fan.

TOM: Basically, that's an extra electric fan that mounts on the front side of the radiator archers at that tournament, which allowed local entrants like Van Lent to spend time with some of the biggest names in the sport. Ellison is a two-time World Cup winner and No. 1 male archer in the world.

"It's a great opportunity. It makes you want to shoot better and it raises my goals higher," Van Lent said. "Seeing them right there with you makes you want to shoot with them, even though you know you really can't."

The quartet of Ellison, Kaminiski, Leek and Lorig were also among six archers who advanced to the Pan American Games, after the trials held in Yankton last summer.

"Maybe this time we can come home with the gold," Ellison told the Press & Dakotan after that event.

Last year's National Target Championships wasn't the only time some of the top archers in the sport have come to Yankton and it won't be the last. But it was certainly a once-in-a-lifetime experience for those involved, according to National Field Archery Association (NFAA) president Bruce Cull.

"We couldn't be more excited. That's just great to see, when you can have the local archers rub shoulders with them," Cull said. "Even the younger ones can sit back and say, 'This is a real possibility.'"

One such young archer, Gabby Keiser of Yankton, had her first brush with the future Olympians at the Target Nationals, and remembers it fondly.

"It was pretty awesome, knowing they're in the same tournament I was and in line with me," said Keiser, 12, a member of Yankton's Junior Olympic Archery Development (JOAD) program. "That was cool that they came to a small town like Yankton."

Keiser got a second chance to hang with the top archers at a tournament earlier this summer in Ogden, Utah. Getting an up-close look at the top competitors in the sport should hopefully trickle down to other younger kids like herself, Keiser said.

"I think it's pretty neat," she said. "Hopefully the other kids want to start shooting and try to be like them some day."

To that end, the sport continues to grow, especially locally, Van Lent said. The Easton Yankton Archery Complex offers after-school programs for kids ages 6-18, and the JOAD team offers instruction for young archers.

"It's been growing crazy since I've been around here to see it," Van Lent said. "More movies with archery in them have come out, plus it's really hot outside and people want to come inside. It's awesome to see."

"Some of the kids here have even met those top pros, too, so that makes them want to shoot even more."

The Olympic archery competition gets under way next Friday near London, with the ranking rounds for both the men and women.

Ellison figures to give the United States men a strong contender for a top-three finish, despite the U.S. having won only two medals (both in Sydney in 2000) since claiming two golds in 1996. South Korea has won three straight men's gold medals.

Outside shot or not, the U.S. team figures to have an increased following from its fans back in Yankton, Van Lent said.

"It makes me want to (follow) the Olympics more, to see if I can get there some day," she said.

Ultimately, the Olympics will be a goal for Van Lent, she said. In the meantime, she is focused on her time with Mount Marty.

Van Lent teamed with Jarod Myer to finish first in the Mixed Compound round at the North Regional Outdoors Championship earlier this year. And in May 2011, she helped the MMC club team finish 10th at the U.S. Intercollegiate Archery Championships.

Like the Mount Marty squad, other local and area archers have started to utilize some of the same styles as the upcoming Olympians, Cull said.

"So many of these kids were using compounds (bows) when we moved the complex here, but now you're seeing more going to the recurve bows like the big boys," he said. "They've got some high expectations of themselves, and they're already setting goals in their mind for that level."

ple. At least one was struck in an adjacent theater by gunfire that went through the wall.

"He would reload and shoot and anyone who would try to leave would just get killed," said Jennifer Seeger, adding that bullet casings landed on her head and burned her forehead.

Within minutes, frantic 911 calls brought some 200 police officers, ambulances and emergency crews to the theater. Holmes was captured in the parking lot. Police said they later found that his nearby apartment was booby-trapped.

Authorities gave no motive for the attack. The FBI said there was no indication of ties to any terrorist groups.

In New York City, Police Commissioner Raymond Kelly said: "It clearly looks like a deranged individual. He has his hair painted red. He said he was the Joker, obviously the enemy of Batman."

Aurora Police Chief Dan Oates would not confirm that information, but did say he had spoken to Kelly. The two used to work together in New York. Asked whether Holmes had makeup to look like the Joker, Oates said: "That to my knowledge is not true."

It was the worst mass shooting in the U.S. since the Nov. 5, 2009, attack at Fort Hood, Texas. An Army psychiatrist was charged with killing 13 soldiers and civilians and wounding more than two dozen others.

It was the deadliest in Colorado since the Columbine High School massacre in suburban Denver in 1999, when two students killed 12 classmates and a teacher and wounded 26 others before killing themselves.

The new Batman movie, the last in the trilogy starring Christian Bale, opened worldwide Friday with midnight showings in the U.S. The plot has the villain Bane facing Bale's Caped Crusader with a nuclear weapon that could destroy all of fictional Gotham.

The shooting prompted officials to cancel the red-carpet premiere in Paris, and some U.S. movie theaters stepped up security for daytime showings.

The film's director, Christopher Nolan, issued a statement on behalf of the cast and crew, expressing their "profound sorrow at the senseless tragedy."

"Nothing any of us can say could ever adequately express our feelings for the innocent victims of this appalling crime, but our thoughts are with them and their families," Nolan said.

The attack began shortly after midnight at the multiplex in Aurora, an urban community on Denver's eastside. Audience members said they thought it was part of the movie, or some kind of stunt associated with it.

The film has several scenes of public mayhem — a hallmark of superhero movies. In one scene, Bane leads an attack on a stock exchange, and in another he leads a shooting and bombing rampage on a packed football stadium.

A federal law enforcement official said Holmes bought a ticket to the show, went into the theater as part of the crowd and propped open an exit door as the movie was playing. The suspect then donned protective ballistic gear and opened fire, the official said, speaking on condition of anonymity to discuss the ongoing investigation.

At some point, the gunman appeared to have stepped outside because several witnesses saw him come through the door.

"All I saw is the door swinging open and the street lights behind, and you could see a silhouette," said Crofter, who was sitting on the left side of the theater and toward the front.

Sylvana Guillen said the gunman, clad in dark clothing, appeared at the front of the theater as the character Catwoman appeared in the movie. Then they heard gunshots and smelled smoke from a canister he was carrying.

As she and her friend, Misha Mostashiry, ran to the exit, Guillen said, they saw a man slip in the blood of a wounded woman he was trying to help.

Oates said the gunman wore a gas mask and a ballistic helmet and vest, as well as leg, groin and throat protectors. He said he bought four guns from local gun shops in the last 60 days and 6,000 rounds of ammunition, including a drum magazine that could fire 50 to 60 rounds per minute.
