Public Arts Project Seeks Donations

Local organizers have launched an online fund-raising campaign at Kickstarter.com to help bring the global art project, "Before I Die" to the City of Yankton. "Before I Die — Yankton" will consist of a 32 feet long by 8 feet high chalk board that will be located at the north end of the Meridian Bridge lower level. The chalk board will prompt passers by to answer the question, "What would you like to Yankton Area Arts board member Sarah Mannes Homstad is helping spearhead the project's installation. She says there are several reasons why "Before I Die" has been so successful in other

"The project invites everyone walking by to participate, and it asks a question that people may have thought about a lot, or maybe not much at all. It might seem pressing to some, and far off in the future for others," she said. "The beauty is that everyone gets to share, and each time the wall is filled with responses, we'll get to document it as a sort of community 'Bucket List,'" she said. In other places it has proven to be very inspirational, and we would like to see it have that kind of impact here.

Yankton would join a growing list of cities that have participated in the project, including Minneapolis, Chicago, Reno, Montreal, Berlin and Vicenza, Italy. "We want Yankton to be the first South Dakota community to do this and we'd love to see Yankton featured alongside those other larger cities," added Mannes Homstad.

Visit Kickstarter.com and search for 'Yankton' to find the group's project page. The project page describes the effort in detail and includes a list of "rewards" that backers can obtain at different pledge levels. The campaign runs through July 29. If successful, the wall will be erected in early August.

USD Professor Awarded $100,000 Grant

assistant professor of basic biomedical sciences at the University of South Dakota, was recently awarded a $100,000 Competitive Research Grant from the South Dakota Board of Regents for his research on a molecule that fights cancer.

Colorectal and breast cancers are two of the most common types of cancer in developed countries, causing more than 90,000 deaths annually in the United States alone. A normal protein, p53, is a tumor suppressor protein and is often inactive in these types of cancers, promoting their malignancy. Rez-vani's research involves a novel protein, UBXN2A, that causes the release of p53 in the cell, thereby suppressing tumor growth. This research promises new inlets into understanding the cell's defense against cancer and lays the groundwork to diagnostic and therapeutic strategies towards common

Dr. Rezvani was one of six recipients of the grant from the South Dakota Board of Regents. His proposal was selected from 52 total applications. The grants, totaling $438,375, were awarded to advance individual projects and strengthen the state's capacity for research and technology development. This is the eighth year that the state has awarded these grants.

The state's commitment to research development is commendable," said Laura Jenski, Ph.D., vice president for research at USD. "Dr. Rezvani's cancer therapy research will ultimately impact research far beyond the borders of our state. Having the state's support is an honor for USD and underscores the valuable research happening at South Dakota universities."

bring visitors to the community or serve as something for local residents to enjoy.

The governor's office had not responded to a request for comment on the lease agreement by press

In February 2008, the board of directors for YCHS voted unanimously to study the feasibility of renovating the Mead Building into a cultural center and new home for the Dakota Territorial Museum.

The three-story building was designed by Dr. Leonard Mead as part of the South Dakota Human Services Center (HSC) campus. It was built in 1909 using Sioux quartzite and concrete, and features a marble staircase.

The Mead Building and much of the rest of the historic campus of HSC was placed on the National Trust for Historic Preservation's 2009 list of the 11 most endangered historic places in America.

Nelson said that one of the terms of the lease is that YCHS must occupy the building by the end of 2018. Currently, plans are to begin moving into the building in early 2018, she stated.

Work will proceed in roughly three phases The first phase will be all the work that needs to be done to make the Mead Building inhabitable for the museum. The second phase will be to work on space for use by YCHS partners, and the final step will be to complete areas that can be used for office rentals, conference space and other things.

"Based off our feasibility studies, we're looking at (the renovation) costing somewhere around $2 million," Nelson said, adding that much more will be needed to address needs outside the bare necessities of the building overhaul.

YCHS expects to pare down many costs it would otherwise incur for a project of this scope by utilizing inmate and volunteer labor.

"We want to provide the opportunity for different entities to use us as a teaching tool," Nelson said. "For example, with the windows we are going to pay for materials and minimal labor because they are going to the Springfield prison. They've been looking for some work, so we are going to send the windows down there. They will restore the original windows and then put in storm windows.

Inmates at the Yankton Trusty Unit and the Yankton Federal Prison Camp are also expected to make contributions.

Nelson said members of the public have been volunteering their services, and she hopes still more will step forward.

Stonebrook Roofing will begin restoring the roof of the Mead Build-ing Monday and will be using clay

"This roof is well worth putting clay tile back on," Nelson said. "It will last hundreds of years with minimal maintenance."

The approximately $600,000 roof project was made possible in large part because of a contribution from Larry Ness and First Dakota National Bank of Yankton, for which Ness is the CEO and chairman of the board. The roof restoration is also being funded by the Deadwood Historic Preservation Commission and the South Dakota State Historical Society Deadwood Funds.

"There are some structural things they're going to have to fix with the roof," Nelson said. "The hail storm last year made a difference. But, overall, it's holding strong."

To mark the occasion, a "Raise the Roof" groundbreaking ceremony will be held at 10 a.m. Monday, July 30, at the Mead Building. Refreshments and tours will be provided.

"It's an opportunity for us to share with the public this great mo-ment," Nelson said. "The official work on the building will begin." YCHS's Mead Building Committee will now officially kick off its capital campaign to raise the funds needed for the next phases of the project. For information on how to contribute, contact Nelson at (605) 665-

As construction proceeds, Nelson asked that the public respect any construction barriers and the requests of HSC security.

"We do not want this to become a distraction for HSC staff," she said. Progress on the project can be tracked at dakotaterritorialmuseum.org, or via the museum's Facebook page.
