SHARING HER TALENTS

As far as the painting classes, Grosz's students come from Armour, Parkston, Wagner, Geddes, Tripp and other area communities.

"∆fter a vear I'm feeli more comfortable (as an instructor)," she said. "At first, it was pretty stressful. I am working with each person individually and not standing in front of a class. I want to make sure they do the right things.'

Grosz believes the individual approach to instruction has benefited both her and the students.

"Everybody works at their own speed. Really, it's the way that Linda (Schroder) did it and the way I continue to do it," she said. "Everybody has come in at different levels, and they have their own projects. It's interesting to see what they can do.'

The art students' paintings range from a woman and her sister as children to works that feature a landscape, calendar and even women's Classes are currently offered on Wednesday mornings and Thursday mornings, and most students are retired women. Grosz has toyed with the idea of offering evening classes to reach those who work during the day. Grosz may have her first night-time student, as a Wagner teacher has inquired about continuing her lessons in the evenings once school starts. The Wagner teacher has begun thinking of others who might take the painting class to ensure an adequate number. However, Grosz also wants to keep the classes small so she can offer individual attention.

"I am working with each person. I can't handle more than five or six students at a time. I'm just helping them with making good decisions about painting," Grosz said. 'Today, I had someone who had been painting for a long time, but she had never had Now, she was learning how to do it." any palette knife painting.

Grosz finds particular satisfaction in nurturing young artists, pointing to an 11-yearold Wagner girl who has taken classes.

"She just put her nose to the grindstone. She didn't look up for two hours," Grosz said. "She was painting a large picture of a flower, and she really enjoyed it. She did a good Grosz wasn't sure how the girl would react afterwards to the intense session.

"With kids, you never know. They might really be into it, or they might be doing it just because their mom wants them to," Grosz said. "But when the girl got done, she said, 'Can I come back tomorrow? The students start with something simple, but some of them have undertaken intricate work, Grosz said

"One student is painting a copy of the Guardian Angel with two children, walking across a bridge with a storm going on in the background," she said. "It's a big picture and has gotten very detailed. She has been painting on it a long time and has done a very nice job on it.'

Grosz teaches only oil painting for adults and teaches some acrylic painting for children. She suggests Tyndall artist Judy Mace for those desiring watercolor instruction or interested in framing. 'Judy Mace has been helpful in setting up this (Delmont) studio for me, with her advice," Grosz said. As part of her anniversary celebration, Grosz sponsored a Western art show and also a photography display. The Western theme, and rural themes in general, strike a real chord with her students.

Grosz is also working with the annual Kuchen Festival Art Show in Delmont, set this year for Sept. 14-15. "Last year, we had it at the (Paintbrush) studio, and the space really wasn't big enough," she said. "The show will go back downtown, in the banquet room of the Delmont Steakhouse and Lounge. We are searching for artists that will participate. They don't have to be my art students." While taking on the role of instructor, Grosz hasn't given up her own art pursuits. She works on her painting, particularly enjoying people as sub-

One painting, a Christmas present for husband Terry, shows his mother, Babe Grosz, in three phases — as a child, as a young mother with her husband and two sons, and as a great-grandmother with one of her infant great-grandchil-

Sam Grosz believes the painting provides her husband with good memories and reinforces the belief that opening the art studio was the right thing to do with Babe's house.

"I just have good vibes from being here (in the house), close to Terry's mother," Sam Grosz said. "I think she approves of her home being used for this purpose.

The Paintbrush Studio is open Wednesdays and Thursdays from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m., other times by chance or appointment. The studio can be found on Facebook, and Grosz can be reached by phone at (605) 661-5547.
