The GOP also has challenged Obama's three judicial nominees to the powerful U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit as they've tried to eliminate the vacancies.

Reid had served notice in April that the Democratic majority could change the Senate rules on "any given day," and he was willing to do so if necessary.

In the Republican-controlled House, courteous behavior, even within the GOP ranks, has barely been perceptible with the ignominious failure of the farm bill. Some collaboration will be necessary if the House is to move ahead on immigration legislation this month.

Conservatives from safe, gerrymandered House districts have rebuffed appeals from some national Republicans who argue that embracing immigration overhaul will boost the party's political and was selected to represent South Dakota. Because South Dakota is not a big pageant state, Schanche said she did not have to compete for her title. After arriving on a Thursday, competition began Friday. The contestants went through a series of on-stage interviews, a swimwear competition and an evening gown competition. The top 15 were announced on the second day, and that group went through a second round of competition. 'You gain so much confidence from being up on that stage," Schanche said. "You really gain a lot of perspective on how to answer questions and be poised with your answer to do the best you can. It's hard — especially standing with an increasingly diverse electorate, especially in the 2016 presidential election. The conservatives strongly oppose any legislation offering legalization to immigrants living here illegally.

Reflecting the will of the rank and file, House Speaker John Boehner of Ohio and other Republicans have said the comprehensive Senate immigration bill that couples the promise of citizenship for those living here unlawfully with increased border security is a nonstarter in the House.

Republicans were assessing the views of their constituents during the weeklong July Fourth break and planned to discuss their next steps at a private meeting Wednesday.

"I think what members need before we proceed on the actual immigration reform is an ironclad guarantee that the border is going to be se-cure," Rep. Matt Salmon, R-Ariz., said just before the recess. He didn't see any urgency to acting quickly. "I find it very interesting cause you get to meet all these other girls who are competing for the same thing and have the same passion you do. It's crazy how close and attached you get to these girls. That's one of the things I like the most — the friendships you bring home.'

Learning new skills and gaining experience, Schanche said she is looking forward to applying what she learned in Florida to real life as she looks to begin her career.

"It's going to help me tremendously," she said. "Hopefully I'll be working at a hospital, and obviously you're going to have to go through the interview process of getting a job there, but now I know how to talk to people. Before that, I was always scared, just like most people are to get up in front of people, talk to people they

"They've been in the shadows for 20 years, and another six months is going to break their backs? I mean come on, that's not even a valid argument."

Rep. Michael McCaul, R-Texas, chairman of the House Homeland Security Committee said Republicans would be hashing out "two key hot spots" in Wednesday's meeting: the pathway to citizenship and health care. "We need to be the party of solutions and not always obstructing. And, so, I think there's an effort here that we have a broken immigration system. We need to fix this immigration system," McCaul said Sunday on CBS' "Face the Nation," predicting that the full House could take up immigration as early as this month and representatives from both chambers could be working to resolve differences in the House and Senate versions late this year or early next.

don't know and tell them your life story and what you're passionate about.'

Schanche is looking into competing in more pageants in the future, and will also get the chance to hand her title over to the winner of the next competition for U.S. International, which will be held after the New Year. She said she is also looking into a platform with which to work.

"I don't have a platform at the moment, but I'm looking into getting involved with domestic violence and abuse. (Also,) something that I'm also really passionate about is animals and pet adoption with the Heartland Humane Society," she said. "I did grow up on a farm, and my family is really big into animals. That's something I really want to get into for the rest of my year -I want to get out there and see what I can do with that."
