them back to life."
On Friday, the first group of tractors depart at 7 a.m. Groups of 18 tractors leave in 10-minute intervals until all 180 tractors have started on their way to Crofton, Neb., and Lindy, Neb.
They will travel west on S.D. Highway 52 and cross the Gavins Point Dam road leading into Nebraska. They will stop at Crofton for their morning break, served by the Crofton FFA chapter. After resuming their drive, they will eat lunch at the Good Shepherd Church in Lindy. They will then proceed back to Yankton to Paddle Wheel Point.
At 6 p.m., the grand parade of 180 tractors will travel through downtown Yankton. The public is encouraged to attend the parade. WNAX-AM farm director Michelle Rook will announce information about each tractor and driver. The parade will proceed west on Cedar, then east on Second Street.
At that point, the parade entrants will head to the Yankton County 4-H Building for a social time. The public can view the tractors as they are parked.

"We encourage people to attend the parade. So many people have heard about the old tractors — who has them and where they're from. People find it very interesting," Harts said.
On Saturday, the tractors depart at 7 a.m. The procession will travel to the Utica Community Center, where the participants will be served refreshments by the Happy Go Lucky 4-H Club. The parade entrants will then proceed to Trondhjem Lutheran Church for lunch. Afterwards, they will ride through Mission Hill and stop at the WNAX towers for their afternoon break, provided by the Mission Hill Hillers 4-H Club.
Upon returning to Paddle Wheel Point, the riders will load up their tractors and head back to their homes, Harts said.
Organizers take safety precautions in selecting and organizing each year's routes, Harts said.
"We stay on the highways, but there may be some gravel roads (that we use)," he said. "We let the highway patrol and the sheriff know our routes. I was just talking to the Yankton County sheriff, and we talked about places that might be the last five years to almost $80 billion a year and the number of members in both parties who make agriculture a priority has dwindled. Still, separating the two bills could create bigger problems as few members may not have an incentive to vote for either piece of legislation.

In a letter to Boehner last week, more than 500 farm groups discouraged GOP leadership from splitting the legislation.
"We believe that splitting the nutrition title from the rest of the bill could result in neither farm nor nutrition programs passing, and urge you to move a unified farm bill forward," the groups wrote.
Compounding the difficulties would be any changes to the farm legislation to gather more conservative votes. The farm bill passed by the House Agriculture Committee and rejected by the full House would have cut farm subsidies by about $2 billion a year, but some Republicans have wanted deeper cuts.

As the GOP counted votes for the split bill strategy, conservative groups proposed further cuts to farm subsidies. They expressed concern that House leaders were just trying to push the bill through so they could begin negotiations with the Senate.
"The end result of such a conference would be a perpetuation of subsidies and government intervention that will continue to harm consumers and taxpayers alike," said Michael A. Needham, CEO of the conservative advocacy group Heritage Action.
At the same time, Agriculture Committee members from both parties who helped craft the delicate balance of the bill don't want to see further reductions.

Minnesota Rep. Collin Peterson, the top Democrat on the Agriculture Committee, said that splitting the bill is "stupid" and he doesn't believe any Democrats would vote for it.
"Even if they got this through the House, I don't see how you are successful in getting a bill out of conference and signed by the president, because you have alienated so many people in the process," he said.
More difficult than passing a farm-only bill would be passing a food stamp bill, as Republicans have disagreed on how much should be cut. The House Agriculture Committee bill cuts about $2 billion a year from the almost $80 billion-a-year program, now called the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program, or SNAP. But some on the right would like to see much bigger cuts and to change the structure of the program.

Billy Shore, the founder and CEO of the anti-hunger group Share Our Strength, says the split would make SNAP vulnerable when many families and children are dependent on it. Around one in seven people used food stamps last year.
"The concern is that (splitting the bill) would make it easier for the Republican leadership to find support for those cuts," Shore said. "For a program that has worked so well for decades it feels a little short-sighted."
