Litke: Jimenez Win At Open Could Set Golf Back 20 Years

BY JIM LITKE

GULLANE, Scotland (AP) — A win here by Miguel Angel Jimenez could set golf back by 20 years.

Not because the Spaniard would be the oldest player ever to win a major championship. But because his fitness regimen is so old school it involves little more than wine, cigars and a stretching routine that looks like a cross between pole dancing and baton twirling.

The 49-year-old walked off Muirfield late Friday afternoon at 3-under 139, leading the British Open over four others by a stroke. Asked whether he was feeling any additional pressure in pursuit of the one accomplishment that has eluded Jimenez throughout a distinguished 31-year pro career, he smiled.

You have to do the same things that you do every day. You don't need to change anything. Just don't think about it. As soon as I finish here and I leave the golf course," he said. "I'm just going to stay with my girlfriend, with my sons, and we're going to have a dinner, like I do

"Ďon't need to do anything special. I'm leading, now I have to go to bed at 10 o'-

'What time will you go to bed?" came a follow-up question. When I feel like it," Jimenez replied. "And especially after Í smoke my cigar." More than a few rivals in his position would have left the interview room and headed straight for the driving range to put in plenty of additional work. Jimenez planned nothing tougher than hitting a few balls with his coach looking on. He'll do the same thing upon returning to the course Saturday morning, followed by a pre-round stretch that has to be seen to be appreciated.

I'll actually arrive early to the course to watch it," Phil Mickelson said. 'He's one of those guys I like to ...

watch and just kind of watch him move, you know, to see how he rolls.'

Jimenez usually begins with a cigar between his lips and a bushy mane pulled back into a ponytail tucked beneath his cap. First, he leans on a club and hunkers down for a few seconds. Next, he puts his knees together and rotates his hips for a few seconds more, clockwise and then counter-clockwise, as his ample gut sways side to side in rhythm. Next, he grabs two clubs and twirls them together, first with his right hand and then his left.

Lastly, Jimenez sticks the head of an iron beneath the sole of each shoe, one at a time, and extends his leg like a man about to stick his toe into a pool.

Skeptical that so little conditioning could unleash such scintillating golf Jimenez followed up a nervy 68 on Thursday with an even-par 71 in faster, firmer conditions — a reporter asked whether he visited a trainer.

Yeah, I had to go every morning. You know, I have my tennis elbow," Jimenez said. "I have to do that. And I have to stretch and I have to move early my body.' "For how long?" came yet another follow-up. "How many minutes?" "Half an hour," Jimenez replied. "Don't need more to warm up. As you see, I don't want to start lifting weights now.

That kind of irreverence might seem like an act, but it's proven very effective at Muirfield, where bad lies and quirky bounces test a golfer's demeanor.

Jimenez hasn't hit many fairways and greens in regulation — he was tied for 32nd and 80th in those categories, respectively, through two rounds. But he also was tied for the lead in scrambling to rescue pars (11 times), sand saves (he has gotten up and down the five times he has found bunkers) and alone in first in oneputts (17).

"Sometimes it's not about to make too many birdies," Jimenez said. "It's about not to make bogeys.'

It's also about coping with nerves, something Jimenez mastered a long time ago. At his age, the definition of pressure "anything that is important to you" dovetails nicely with his definition of fun.

"Sometimes you can see me serious because of a situation, but having fun don't mean that you are falling on the ground and start laughing. "Having fun is doing what you like to do in your life," Jimenez said finally. "And I do Now he only has to do it for two more Yankton Tappers pitcher Trey Krier sends the ball plate-ward during the Tappers' home matchup with Tabor on Thursday at Riverside Field. Krier no-hit the Bluebirds in the 10-0 seven-inning victory, the third career no-hitter for the Mount Marty College graduate.

ith a large crowd in the Riverside Field stands as part of Fan Appreciation Night, Trey Krier rewarded them with another Krier-like performance. Seven innings. Eleven strikeouts. Zero hits allowed. Krier, the 25-year-old lefty from Sioux Falls, struck out 11 Tabor batters and walked just two as the Yankton Tappers won the South Central League amateur baseball battle 10-0 on Thursday night.

For Krier, a 2010 graduate of Mount Marty College, it was career no-hitter No. 3.

"At no point in the seven innings did I feel like I was going to hold on to it," he said after the game. "I was just throwing it over the plate, and I guess they weren't going to make con-

"That's how it goes some-

In the case of Krier, however, 'sometimes' is becoming quite regular.

Both of his previous nohitters came over a 4-month period in 2010 — one at the college level and the other in amateur ball.

In April of that year, he threw a 7-inning perfect game
— the first in the history of the GPAC — for Mount Marty College against Briar Cliff in Sioux City, Iowa. With the wind blowing straight out, Krier induced 10 fly ball outs.

Four months later, in August, he hurled a 9-inning no-hitter against the Rapid City Black Sox at the S.D. State Class A Amateur Tournament in Yankton. Krier struck out 17 batters that day, which marked the sixth no-hitter in state amateur history.

Three years later, Krier was up to his old tricks. Thanks, as always, to a mixture of changeups and fastballs — and his usual mentality of location being the key. "He's the only pitcher I've had that gets upset when he strikes a guy out but misses his spot," Tappers catcher Kory Bromley said. "He's a perfectionist. But I think that's why he throws so many no-hitters.'

Regular season or postseason. Krier's teammates know he's capable of such a performance every time he

"Trey's really good, and he can come out with a game like this against anybody, said Tappers co-manager Ross Heine, who played behind Krier in all three of his no-hitters.

Tabor, Krier's latest victim, came to Yankton having won nine of its previous 10 games, in the process vaulting itself into district champion conversations.

The Bluebirds ran into

No-Hitters For Trey Krier

• April 2010: Perfect game, 7 innings, for Mount Marty against Briar Cliff. It was the first perfect game in the history of the GPAC.

• August 2010: No-hitter, 9 innings, for the Yankton Tappers against the Rapid City Black Sox in the State A Amateur Tournament. He struck out 17 batters.

• July 18, 2013: No-

hitter, 7 innings, for the Yankton Tappers against the Tabor Bluebirds. He struck out 11 batters.

trouble early, surrendering three runs to the Tappers in each of the first two innings. Yankton built a 9-0 lead after four innings, turning the focus for those in the stands — and on the field — on Krier's no-hit bid.

"He doesn't make a big deal about it, so nobody else really did," Yankton first baseman Jared Miller said. "It a big deal, though. It doesn't happen too often."

The only real references to the no-hitter, aside from the scoreboard, were the "For Tabor in that half inning, no runs, no hits and no Yankton errors" updates by PA announcer Dave Spencer.

"I didn't really think about it as the game was going on, but you knew it was there," Miller said.

A handful of memorable defensive plays also helped keep the no-hit bid alive for the fans in attendance.

Tabor's second batter in the top of the first inning, Jeff Honner, smoked a line drive on two hops to right field, but Yankton's Dave Schmidt came up firing and threw out Honner at first base.

"Little did you know that would be the one to save the game," Heine said.

Later in the game, a Tabor batter connected on a sharp grounder toward right field, but the ball hit the lip of the grass and ricocheted directly to second baseman Tate Brucker, who threw to first.

Those are the kinds of breaks you get when you have no-hit stuff, Miller joked. 'We didn't even really need any defense, it was pretty boring," he said. Every no-hitter or perfect game is marked by great defensive plays, and Thursday was no different. "It's funny how those things happen in special situations like that," said Krier, who recalled a sparkling catch by MMC centerfielder Andy Turbak during his 2010 perfect game. For Krier, there have been

NASCAR Grounds Aerial Camera Systems

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — NASCAR suspended the use of aerial camera systems Friday, nearly two months after a Fox Sports cable snapped and injured fans and damaged some cars at Charlotte Motor Speedway.

Ten people were injured during the Coca-Cola 600 when part of the drive rope landed in the grandstand. Three people were taken to hospitals, and were checked out and released soon after.

NASCAR has decided, in collaboration with its broadcast partners, to suspend all media partner usage of aerial camera systems that hang over race tracks," NASCAR said in a statement. "The safety of our competitors and our fans remains NASCAR's No. 1 priority, and until total evaluation and analysis have been completed, usage of this particular technology enhancement and any similar enhancements, has been suspended."

Fox successfully used the CAT-CAM system at the Daytona 500 and the Sprint All-Star race at Charlotte. ESPN.com said Friday that ESPN had planned to use the Batcam system next weekend for the Brickyard 400 at Indianapolis and the Aug. 11 race at Watkins Glen.

"We have an excellent working relationship with NASCAR and totally understand their position," Rich Feinberg, ESPN's vice president of motorsports production, told ESPN.com. "We look forward to beginning our NASCAR Sprint Cup schedule at Indianapolis and televising 17 great weeks of racing."
