than it did before I had surgery. It was obviously bothering me for a pretty good while." Coming off a career year in 2012, Willingham tried to play through knee pain for much of the first half of the season, and it cost him. He is hitting just .224 with 10 homers and 37 RBIs, a far cry from the powerful force he was for the Twins last year. The quick healing time has Willingham encouraged that he made the right decision to get the surgery during the season rather than try to play through the pain for the rest of the year. "I think from the get-go it's been encouraging because I didn't have any swelling in the knee," Willingham said. "That puts you a week ahead of schedule right there. So it started off well and everything's good now. Now it's just a matter of getting the endurance and the baseball activity up and playing a few games." Willingham will take more batting practice the rest of the week and ramp up his activity heading into a rehab assignment. He was hopeful that his time in the minors would be short and he could re-join the Twins as early as a weekend series in Chicago against the White Sox from Aug. 9-11. But manager Ron Gardenhire said he thought that timeline might be a little optimistic, and the Twins will wait to see how his knee responds to running the bases and playing in live game action in the minor leagues before making any decision.

practice round for us (pros), because there's still something at stake." With a previous high finish of second at the Hillcrest Pro-Am, Schultz said he always enjoys coming to Yankton because of it's typically tough field. "I always have high expectations when I come here," he said. "It's a lot of golf; four days, but it's a very well-run tournament." The length of the pro-am — a unique setup for the Dakotas Tour — is truly a draw, Schultz said. "All the pros know about Yankton," he said. "A lot of guys will join the tour just for this event." Mitchell standout Kristin Sabers was the individual gross champion with a score of 83. The 40th annual Hillcrest Invitational Pro-Am begins Thursday and runs through Sunday, with 208 golfers in the field.
