Press. Israel, for instance, is investigating an airstrike that killed eight members of a single family.

Should the civilian death toll continue to rise, Israel could see international support crumble and face calls for restraint, as has been the case during past offensives in Gaza, Lebanon and the West Bank.

Civilians would be especially at risk if Israel begins the ground operation. The army has massed thousands of forces along the border.

Israel has come under some criticism. U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon expressed his concern over the civilian deaths. And the U.N. human rights chief said Friday the Israeli air campaign may violate international laws prohibiting the targeting of civilians.

"We have received deeply disturbing reports that many of the civilian casualties, including of children, occurred as a result of strikes on homes," said Navi Pillay, the U.N. high commissioner for human rights. She called for an immediate cease-fire.

For now, cease-fire efforts show few signs of taking hold. After White House offers to help facilitate a truce, U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry is considering a trip to the region next week, a U.S. official said Friday.

The official, speaking on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to talk to the media, said the U.S. wants a cease-fire but doesn't want a result that rewards Hamas or weakens Israel. He said Hamas must stop firing the rockets.

Efforts to end the crisis have been complicated by a more muted role by Egypt, which historically has served as a mediator between Israel and Hamas.

In the 2012 fighting between Israel and Hamas, Egypt's then-President Mohammed Morsi brokered a cease-fire, leveraging the influence of his Muslim Brotherhood held with its ally Hamas.

Morsi was ousted in 2013 by Egypt's military. His successor, President Abdel-Fattah el-Sissi — the former head of the military — has taken a more behind-the-scenes role in the current crisis. His government says he has been in contact with both the Israelis and the Palestinians to find a solution. But if Egypt has put forward any proposals for a resolution, none have been made public.

With little desire to help Hamas, the Egyptian government has, however, sought to show it is supporting the Palestinians by ordering food and medical supplies sent to Gaza and allowing some wounded into Egypt.

Egypt's Foreign Ministry accused Israel of "excessive and unjustified use of military force" and continuing "policies of repression and mass punishment." But it only urged Israel to show restraint and "consider the humanitarian aspect" — while calling on both sides to stop violence and abide by the 2012 truce.

Hamas officials said the group is ready for a cease-fire, but only if it gets something in return, such as a restoration of the 2012 truce and the release of prisoners arrested by Israel in a recent crackdown. They said the group has been in touch with Egypt, Qatar and Turkey as possible mediators.

"We have contacts with various Arab and international parties but Israel is showing intransigence," said Ghazi Hamad, a top Hamas official in Gaza.

individual federal assistance was in 2011, after homes and businesses were damaged when the Missouri River flooded. This year's flooding was caused by prolonged heavy rains last month, particularly in the southwest.

The town of Wessington Springs also was devastated by a June 18 tornado that damaged or destroyed dozens of buildings and displaced about 80 people.

KPI-JCI and Astec Mobile Screens, as well as Astec Industries subsidiaries Peterson Pacific and Telectack Ltd. Until his retirement, Vig was responsible for five of Astec Industries' 18 divisions, and nearly 1,200 of the corporation's 4,000 employees.

"I think in November, I slept in my bed a total of six days," Vig said of the travel required for his position. "It's been a whirlwind, but it's been beneficial and educational."

He will miss the people associated with his job the most, whether they were employees, customers or allies in advocacy groups.

"I'll miss some of the challenges, too," Vig added. "Challenges are good if you attack them and try to solve the problem. We'll see what other challenges I have in front of me."

Those who have known Vig through the years are convinced that he is equipped to handle whatever challenges may arise.

Dr. J. Don Brock, founder of Astec Industries and current chairman of the board, met Vig in 1997, when Vig was engineering manager.

"Joe, most of all, is not only a good engineer, but he's a great leader," Brock said in a recent issue of the company magazine, "The Feed." "I couldn't be prouder to have worked with Joe and been a coach to him along the way. I watched him with his quiet manner make changes that helped to get the companies performing better; his group of companies has ended up being signaled to many that there was community support for the tax levies. However, the measure failed.

"That would have not only taken care of the cuts, but also would have added to our budget so we could have expanded and grown our school and paid our teachers more. But the people turned it down two-to-one," Williams said. "The board at that time made major cuts, including teachers, paraprofessionals and some programs."

After the budget cuts, the school district was still faced with a large deficit and sought a $1.4 million opt-out the following year to help cover the shortfall. That failed, as well.

"So for the last three years, we've been running with a huge budget deficit," Williams said. "We've been paying for that deficit by underfunding the health insurance fund. And we've reduced the deficit to about $800,000 basically by replacing more expensive teachers who retired with newer, less expensive teachers. That always happens anyway, and isn't a solution long-term."

"Meanwhile, we're still putting out a quality product," he continued. "Our kids are graduating, and we have two kids that are going to Ivy League schools. We just came in fifth place of the national history contest, and our Science Olympiad team

No more clothes are needed, though household supplies such as silverware, flashlights, laundry soap and kitchen bags were still needed, the Rev. Marvin Avery told The Daily Republic newspaper.

Judy McPhail, whose family home was lost, visited the distribution center Wednesday.

"This has been so helpful," she said, patting the piles of women's clothing. "I need work clothes. I feel like some of the best performers in the organization. Joe exemplifies our core values. He believes in taking care of the equipment and you can trust everything he tells you. He does the right thing and has respect for the people he works with. He operates as good decentralized companies and most of all, he makes a good return for our shareholders."

Jeff May, president of KPI-JCI and Astec Mobile Screens' South Dakota location, told "The Feed" that Vig's leadership during difficult economic conditions in 2003 and 2009 will be a large part of his lasting legacy.

In 2009, despite a 50 percent downturn in volume from the previous year, Vig was able to keep KPI-JCI and Astec Mobile Screens profitable.

"Under Joe's leadership, we were able to rebound from those tough times and grow and prosper into a much stronger organization," May said.

Yankton Mayor Dave Carda was able to move back to his hometown of Yankton with his family when Vig offered him a job 13 years ago. He still works at KPI.

Carda told the Press & Dakotan that Vig will be missed at the company.

"He is also a big supporter of Yankton and promotes it wherever he goes," Carda said.

Press & Dakotan publisher Gary Wood concurred with that description of Vig.

"As an advocate for Yankton, he's been instrumental in promoting the region on a national and international basis," he said. "He's worked tirelessly to make people aware of Yankton and all that it offers while working on the Yankton Area Progressive Growth board and the many

I tell people at work, 'You're probably getting sick of this outfit, but it's all I have.'"

Residents of Wessington Springs and Canton, which was hit hard by flooding, can apply to the state's Housing Opportunity Fund for grants of up to $5,000.

Sen. John Thune, R-S.D., on Friday said home and business owners in Minnehaha, Lincoln and Union counties can apply for low-interest disaster loans through the U.S. Small Business Administration. Those counties are eligible because they are next to Iowa counties where a major disaster was declared.

Even though Gulick is moving 200 miles away, he vows it won't be the last time he plays with the band. "I do plan to come back and visit and play with the band. There are three upcoming events that I most certainly will come back for," Gulick said. "We just loved it here. It's such a great community. It's tough to leave."

other volunteer activities he's been involved with over the years."

Vig received the Frank Yaggie Award last year from the Yankton Area Chamber of Commerce for his leadership and commitment to the community.

He has been involved with the Yankton Baseball Association, the Yankton Morning Optimist Club, the Building Yankton's Bridge Committee, the Hillcrest Golf and Country Club, and Trinity Lutheran Church.

Vig remains humble about his achievements, saying he doesn't consider himself a very good ambassador for the community.

"I'm proud of Yankton," he said. "People ask me if I'm going to move. I say, 'There is no way I would ever move.' This is our home. I might spend a couple months in Arizona so I don't have to shovel snow, but I won't leave."

"I certainly share the merits of Yankton wherever I go as a great place to live and raise a family. When I go down south and they kid me about the weather up here, I just lie about it and tell them it is 10 degrees warmer than it really is," he joked. "We need more people here so we can fill the positions we have."

Vig said he doesn't know what exactly his future will hold beyond taking in more family events and golf outings.

However, he does know what it won't hold: "I'll go on and do other things, but right now that will not include work."

think he's doing a good job of it."

With uncertainty surrounding the prospects of an opt-out and different views on the school board's strategy moving forward, Williams said he realized it would be better to devote his efforts in a different manner.

Kindle said he appreciated Williams' time on the school board.

"(Jay) is very passionate about education, student learning, funding and local control," he said. "These are areas educators are also concerned about. I always appreciated Jay's honesty and willingness to listen to two sides of an issue before making a final decision. He kept educational issues at the forefront both locally and at the state level. He has been a real advocate for the Yankton School District and our students."

Williams said he will now focus on ways to obtain more school funding from the state level. He is one of two Democratic candidates running for District 18 House. He will also continue his involvement with the Yankton County Democratic Party, of which he is currently co-chairman.

"I'm going to continue working as hard as I can to see the state come up with not just a cost-of-living raise every year, but a real raise," Williams said. "We have to break out of what we're doing now and start actually funding the schools."
