SD Trail Of Governors To Expand

BY BOB MERCER
State Capitol Bureau

PIERRE — Three more statues, including a likeness of the late George S. Mickelson, will be added Nov. 1 to the Trail of Governors, officials said Wednesday.

A statue of the late Dick Kneip is scheduled for installation in 2015. He was South Dakota's last elected Democratic governor.

So far six of the statues have been completed and placed throughout South Dakota's capital city.

Bill Janklow is the only one on the capitol complex. Five others — Arthur Mellette, Frank Farrar, Harvey Wollman, Walter Dale Miller and Harlan Bushfield — are in prominent places throughout the business and government district.

The Mickelson statue will be placed along Capitol Avenue near the Fighting Stallions memorial on the Capitol grounds.

Fighting Stallions was erected in honor of the eight men including Mickelson who died in the 1993 state airplane crash.

The location of the Mickelson statue received approval Wednesday from the state Capitol Complex Restoration and Beautification Commission.

The statues cost $68,000 apiece. The money comes from private sources to the Trail of Governors Foundation.

"We appreciate the partnership we have with the city and with you," Rick Jensen, the foundation president, told the commission members.

The statues of Mickelson, Robert Vessey and Peter Norbeck will be revealed to the public on Saturday, Nov. 1, as part of South Dakota's events marking the 125th anniversary of statehood.

Statehood day is actually Nov. 2 but organizers didn't want events to conflict with people's traditional Sunday activities.

Vessey was an early organizer for what is today known as the South Dakota Retailers Association. His statue will be in front of the Retailers office building along at the corner southwest of the Capitol.

Norbeck's statue will be in Pierre's downtown business district.

Chuck Schroyer, a retired lawyer who has long worked to promote Pierre, said Jensen and another businessman, Leroy Foster, recognized the impact of Rapid City's presidents project to that community's downtown.

Schroyer said they wanted to apply the concept to Pierre using statues of the governors. The foundation raises money and donates the statues and the Pierre city government takes responsibility for their upkeep.

"We're very successful finding family members from all these governors," he said.

The Dick Kneip statue will be presented in 2015, he said.

Jensen said the Trail of Governors is a $2.1 million project at this point. "Some are paying over time," he said.

South Dakota is the only state that has done this, according to Jensen. "The idea is to drive tourism, economic development," Jensen said. He said they're like "a treasure map" for people to follow.

"This is a great project. I love it," Mayor Laurie Gill said. She is a member of the Capitol complex commission.

South DakotaMemorial To Get Fix-Up

BY BOB MERCER
State Capitol Bureau

PIERRE — A state commission gave its blessing Wednesday to changes on the triangle of lawn where stands South Dakota's monument to America's soldiers of the Civil War.

The one-acre site near the state Capitol and the governor's mansion will receive two concrete approaches from the sidewalks along Capitol and Wells avenues.

Also coming are two interpretive displays, lighting and a flagpole where the Stars and Stripes can fly, day and night.

Some of the impetus to make the site more meaningful came from state government employee David Smith.

He grew up in Pierre and served in the U.S. Marines Corps but didn't know the story of the monument.

There was nothing at the site to explain its purpose or history, other than the phrase on its base: "In Honor of the Defenders of Our Nation."

Smith was intrigued by what he eventually learned about it from Matthew Reitzel, an archivist at the South Dakota State Historical Society.

The society will complete the research and provide the interpretative panels based on Reitzel's work.

"We're very grateful for their contribution," Mike Mueller said. He handles many special projects on the Capitol complex for the state Bureau of Administration.

The Vermont-granite monument stands 30 feet, alone amid grass and trees.

South Dakota's monument to Civil War soldiers in Pierre is going to undergo renovations, the state Capitol Complex Restoration and Beautification Commission decided Wednesday.

The monument's dedication waited until 1920.

Among the organizations pushing for it was a veterans organization known as the Grand Army of the Republic.

The G.A.R. was active throughout the Union states after the Civil War and had meeting halls in many South Dakota communities, similar to today's American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars posts.

The G.A.R.'s second national leader, Gen. John "Black Jack" Logan, issued the order May 5, 1868, designating May 30 of that year as Decoration Day.

Strewing of flowers on the graves of soldiers had become local tradition in some communities but this established nationwide what is now Memorial Day.

One of the proposed interpretive panels at the monument will explain its history and the other will provide a brief history of the G.A.R.

The monument and flag would be lit at night and some benches will be added, Mueller said.

The Civil War statue sits across Capitol Lake from the monuments to the fighting men and women of more modern conflicts starting with World War II.

The state Capitol Complex Restoration and Beautification Commission voted unanimously Wednesday in favor of the enhancement project for the Civil War site.

Several commission members spoke favorably about the plan.

"It's a wonderful part of history you're saving for the people of Pierre and the people of the state," member Carla Sahr of Pierre said.

Mayor Laurie Gill described the project as wonderful.

"It's beautiful and people don't know what it is," Gill said about the statue.

Gambling Foes To Fight Horse Racing Ballot Measure

BY GRANT SCHULTE

Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — Gambling opponents have launched a campaign against a Nebraska ballot measure that would allow betting on previously recorded horse races shown on machines that resemble casino slots.

The group Gambling with the Good Life is traveling the state and working with churches in hopes of defeating the November ballot proposal, executive director Pat Loontjer said Wednesday. If approved by voters, the constitutional amendment would clear the way for the video terminals at licensed race tracks in Omaha, Lincoln, Hastings, Grand Island and Columbus.

Supporters say the machines will help Nebraska's horse racing industry, which has struggled for decades as other games became more popular and neighboring states built casinos. The measure is also backed by the Nebraska Farm Bureau Federation because of horse racing's ties to agriculture and its support for 4-H programs.

Gambling opponents say the machines would effectively open the door to casino gambling because they run as fast as regular slots and can be just as addictive. Nor are they likely to save traditional horse racing, Loontjer said, pointing to tracks in Nebraska that run as few as one live race a year.

"This is the camel's nose under the tent," said Loontjer, a longtime anti-gambling activist from Omaha.

Nebraska's horse racing industry plans to campaign in favor of the measure, arguing that it will modernize a form of pari-mutuel betting that already exists in the state. The machines allow bettors to view statistics about the horses before each race is shown on the screen, but information that would identify specific horses or races is removed.

"In no way is this expanded gambling," said Gene McCloud, a Grand Island businessman and race-horse owner who plans to help push for the amendment.

Nebraska state Sen. Scott Lautenbaugh, who introduced the measure, said the horse racing machines require a degree of skill — assessing a horse's record among other factors — whereas casino slots are purely based on chance.

The machines "can look like whatever you want them to look like," said Lautenbaugh, of Omaha. "What matters is what they actually do," which he said could help revive the industry and preserve its jobs.

The amendment would distribute 49 percent of the tax revenue to schools, 49 percent to reduce property taxes and 2 percent to a state treatment fund for compulsive gamblers. Loontjer said the property tax benefit would amount to only a few cents per person annually.

Gov. Dave Heineman vetoed a bill in 2012 that would have allowed the State Racing Commission to license and regulate historic horse racing terminals. Constitutional amendments don't need the governor's approval, and Nebraska lawmakers approved the amendment for the ballot this year with 30 votes — the minimum needed.

Nebraska allows keno, horse racing, and a lottery, but voters have resisted video gambling machines.

Across the Missouri River, Iowa offers one of the nation's widest ranges of gambling. Nebraska residents generated nearly $327 million in gross revenue for Iowa casinos last year, according to a consultant for the Iowa Racing and Gaming Commission. Total gross revenue for the casinos was $1.4 billion, but only 53 percent came from Iowa gamblers.

Groups Work To Draw Women Into SD State Govt.

PIERRE (AP) — Of the roughly 175 candidates still in the running for the South Dakota House or Senate, roughly 26 percent are women.

Local and national groups are working to encourage more women to take roles in government. It's an effort that's moving slower than Barb Everist expected. She was the first woman to be Senate Majority Leader in the state in 2000.

"We're very successful finding family members from all these governors," he said.

The Dick Kneip statue will be presented in 2015, he said.

Jensen said the Trail of Governors is a $2.1 million project at this point. "Some are paying over time," he said.

South Dakota is the only state that has done this, according to Jensen. "The idea is to drive tourism, economic development," Jensen said. He said they're like "a treasure map" for people to follow.
