Particularly when it came to knowing where to aim, she added.
Experienced archers would know where the bullseye would be on, say, a deer, but not so much on something like a lion or a dinosaur, Danielle said.
Added Sandy, "It definitely gave you some excitement."
Aside from the outdoor shoots, the weekend tournament also featured two other challenges for archers. On Saturday at the National Field Archery Association (NFAA) Easton Complex, archers competed in a Milk Jug Shoot and a Steel Challenge.
The stop in Yankton was the 13th on a 17-state tour by Rinehart this year. The tour began in Florida in February and will conclude in Iowa on Aug. 23-24.
The event was held at Paddlewheel Point, rather than the new NFAA outdoor ranges, because the NFAA is getting ready to host the Outdoor Nationals on July 30-Aug. 3. If the Rinehart tournament returns to Yankton next summer, it would likely move to the new ranges.

Mike Best and Charlie Hoemberg traveled nearly five hours from their homes in west central Minnesota to compete in the Rinehart 100 Tournament in Yankton.
And their takeaway from the trip?
"We loved it," said Best, who lives in Fergus Falls. "Rinehart is always a fun weekend."
The friends shot at the Rinehart tournament in Omaha, Nebraska, last year, and competed at the Aurora, Minnesota, event last month.
The biggest comparison Hoemberg could make between the Rinehart tournaments in Nebraska, Minnesota and Yankton was the space at Paddlewheel Point.
"This was a little more open, more trees," said Hoemberg, who lives in Staples, Minnesota, located southeast of Fergus Falls.
Having 100 targets does, however, allow an archer to literally shoot his way out of trouble if he has a bad stretch, he added.

"We loved it," said Best, who lives in Fergus Falls. "Rinehart is always a fun weekend."
The friends shot at the Rinehart tournament in Omaha, Nebraska, last year, and competed at the Aurora, Minnesota, event last month.
The biggest comparison Hoemberg could make between the Rinehart tournaments in Nebraska, Minnesota and Yankton was the space at Paddlewheel Point.
"This was a little more open, more trees," said Hoemberg, who lives in Staples, Minnesota, located southeast of Fergus Falls.
Having 100 targets does, however, allow an archer to literally shoot his way out of trouble if he has a bad stretch, he added.
