Augie Men's Golf Coach Resigns
SIOUX FALLS – Augustana head men's golf coach Steve Klock announced today that he is resigning his position at Augustana for additional professional opportunities within the private sector.
Klock recently completed his fourth season as the head coach of the men's golf program, leading the team to its best finish at the NSIC Championships during his tenure in 2014-15. The fifth-place finish was the highest by the program at the conference championships since 2008-09.

A search for a replacement will begin immediately.
In 2014-15, Klock led the team to its first team title in over two seasons winning the Upper Iowa Spring Invite on April 4. Camp

For coaches and players. however, they were more concerned with getting better for the basketball season that begins in less than five months.

"A lot of different people have different opinions on team camps and whether it's worth your time, but we put a lot of value in them," Yankton coach Trey Krier said. "Our girls need to play."
The fact that it came against new competition, that's a benefit, according to Yankton senior Sophie Drotzmann.

"It's really good to see something different," she said. "It's nice that we can try different things and see things we don't expect."

Yankton, for example, played games Monday against Mount Vernon-Plankinton, Hamlin and Vermillion, which are all Class A schools.

Sure, it may have been nice to face teams in the same class, but the different competition does have its benefits, according to Bultsma.

'When it's different people, you can learn something new," she said. "We can use those experiences; with different offenses and different defenses."

Most – if not all – of the teams, like Yankton, on the floor Monday were gearing up for seasons under coaches that are back from last season.

The Gazelles, in particular, have the luxury of gearing up for their second season under Krier. That means they can avoid the first-season adjustments between players and coaches, Drotzmann

"We can nit-pick on everyone's stuff, because we know what to expect from each other," she said.

Krier, like every high school coach in South Dakota, is allowed four out-of-season contacts. For him, those would include the Yankton Gazelles Camp, as well as camps at Augustana, University of South Dakota and Mount Marty.

The main goal for taking players to teams camps, Krier said, is preparation.

We need to get a ball in their hands in a situation where they can make plays," Krier said. "We always tell them, they'll be in a situation down the road where they need to make a play, and that's what these camps do for you."

While every team will have to adjust for graduation losses, Freeman especially enjoyed the chance Monday to take the floor with some new faces in the mix.

The Flyers graduated three seniors from a team that won 17 games and the District 9B title - coming up just short of a state tournament trip.

"This is their chance to gel," head coach Curt Sage said of the young players who took the floor Monday.

Before all the players begin worrying about basketball season, however, many of them will first turn their attention to other fall sports like cross country or volleyball. Sioux Falls Christian is the returning Class A state champion, while Mount Vernon-Plankinton finished fourth last season.

For Bultsma, who happens to play volleyball, her summer has been filled with not only basketball team camps

but volleyball team camps. "That keeps you pretty busy," she said. "There's some down time, but it's a lot of travel. But you have fun when you get to spend time with each other.

MLB announced in February it had hired Anomaly its new multimedia creative marketing agency. Its first campaign, "This in Baseball," debuted in April for opening day and featured Trout, Stanton and Puig. Others highlighted this season include Joc Pederson, Nolan Arenado and George Springer.

"When you look at the Mike Trouts and the Bryce Harpers and the Kris Bryants of the world, we're just so fortunate and we need to take advantage of this opportunity to the fullest," said Jacqueline Parkes, Major League Baseball's senior vice president and chief marketing officer.

Yet as much as baseball tries to move forward, the sport always looks behind. Hosting the All-Stars for the first time since 1988, the Reds celebrate their history at Great American Ball Park, which opened in 2003. Statues of former stars Ted Kluszewski, Ernie Lombardi, Joe Nuxhall and Frank Robinson greet fans outside the home plate gate in Crosley Terrace, an homage to the sloped outfield at the team's home from 1912-70.

A Rose Garden outside the first-base stands was planted in tribute to — who else? Pete Rose, the hometown hero banned from baseball for life for gambling on the Reds to win while playing and managing the club.

The symbol of this years Midsummer Classic is a handlebar mustache, befitting the club that became baseball's first professional franchise in 1869. Special old-style caps with horizontal stripes will be used, although not in the traditional «pill box» shape.

There are two smokestacks in right center, and a riverboat deck sits above the batter's eye in center field.

For the Home Run Derby on Monday night, batters fell short in their efforts to hit the ball into the next state. A 1980U.S. Supreme Court decision determined the Ohio-Kentucky border was the low-water mark on the northerly side of the Ohio River— as it existed in 1792, when Kentucky became the 15th U.S. state.
