Edward Jones Financial Advisor Wins Award For Outstanding Year

Stacy Hubert of the financial services firm Edward Jones recently won the firm's coveted Ted Jones Prospecting Award, which recognizes financial advisors who achieve high levels of success early in their careers. Hubert was one of only 923 of the firm's more than 14,000 financial advisors to receive the award.

one-on-one investment information. I plan to do my best to continue meeting that need."

Edward Jones regional meeting in Brainerd, Minnesota.

Jim Weddle, the firm's managing partner, said the award is a strong indicator of a financial advisor's future success.

"We recruit and hire our financial advisors from among the best, so we expect our financial advisors to do well," Weddle said. "But to achieve such success this early in her career is outstanding, and I commend Hubert for her performance and dedication."

The award is named after Ted Jones, the legendary son of the firm's founder, who recognized the need to sell securities to individual investors and established the firm's one-broker branch office concept.

"I'm very proud to receive an award named after Ted Jones," Hubert said. "It is because of him that our Yankton office exists, and I believe we are serving an important need here for

USD Law Professor Recipient Of Awards

VERMILLION — Chris Hutton, professor of law at the University of South Dakota School of Law, has been named the recipient of the 2015 Cutler Award for Excellence in Legal Education and will receive a $5,000 prize through the USD Foundation. This is the second year in a row she received the honor that's part of the prestigious Richard and Sharon Cutler Faculty Awards in Liberal Arts. Hutton also won the 2015 McKusick award.

Hutton has taught at USD since 1984, primarily in the areas of criminal law, criminal procedure and evidence. Among the products of her research is her most recent co-authorship of "South Dakota Evidence," 2nd Edition with John Larson published in 2013. In addition, Hutton has been an active contributor to the legal practice in the state, including providing annual training to the judiciary, chairing the evidence committee of the state bar and being appointed by Gov. Dennis Daugaard to the Criminal Justice Advisory Council. The primary focus of Hutton's work, however, has been teaching and mentoring generations of law students, with particular emphasis on supporting and expanding the role of women in the law.

"It has been a joy to work with the students and faculty here at the law school for over 30 years. Faculty members strive not only to foster students' knowledge of the law but also their commitment to justice, dedication to public service, strong work ethic and high ethical standards," Hutton said. "It is gratifying to see my former students incorporate these ideals into their work."

Tom Geu, dean of the law school, said the Cutler Law Firm in Sioux Falls established the award for excellence in teaching last year through a generous endowed gift. It is presented annually to a full-time USD Law School professor whose research, service and mentorship generally benefit the legal practice in South Dakota.

"Professor Hutton continues to be involved in numerous areas of service to the South Dakota legal community and has an unwavering dedication to our law students," he said. "She is a wonderful choice to receive this award and continues to be an integral part of the law school and South Dakota legal communities."

Hutton also received the 2015 McKusick Award from the Student Bar Association of the University of South Dakota School of Law, which recognizes an outstanding member of the South Dakota Bar for contributions to the legal profession. The award is named in honor of Marshall M. McKusick, who served the legal profession and the law school for nearly five decades.

All This Idling Is Bad For Wallets, And The Environment

BY RAY MAGLIOZZI
King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Ray MAGLIOZZI

Dear Car Talk:

I write today to ask that you clarify the role of idling when it comes to gasoline cars, diesel pickups and large, over-the-road commercial vehicles. All the time, I see people sitting in their vehicles on a perfectly beautiful day, reading their mail at the post office, with their engines running, windows down or not. I see diesel pickup owners — and there are a lot of them in Texas — who will leave their trucks running, again in good weather, while they go into the convenience store or post office. Even more personal is the intrusion of an 18-wheeler into our neighborhood, which is against the restrictions, but no one is sufficiently motivated to call the authorities to correct the situation. The most annoying aspect of it is the 30-plus minutes of elephant-rumbling idling that takes place prior to his departure and upon his return. I thought all this idling was basically unnecessary, "fuelish" and damaging to the engine, not to mention harmful to the environment. I hope you can address this to a national audience, as it would have potential to do a lot of good. Thanks.

— Patrick
You're right about everything except harming the engine, Patrick.

These days, with fuel injection and computer engine management, cars and trucks can idle until they run out of gas without doing any extra damage to the engine (assuming the cooling system is working properly). Idling does add wear and tear to the engine — anytime the engine is running, you're decreasing the useful life of the oil and slowly wearing out parts. But it's no more harmful than driving.

Unlike driving, however, idling is a complete waste of fuel. It also increases pollution, by a lot. And it's entirely unnecessary. Modern cars can be driven immediately once they're started. That's the best, and fastest, way to warm them up.

There are exceptions. If it's 3 degrees out, 30 seconds of idling to allow the oil to circulate is a good idea. And you'd want to drive at a modest speed, even after that, for a few minutes until the engine is up to operating temperature, rather than jumping right on the highway and flooring it. But 99 percent of the time, idling does nothing to help your engine.

It can improve your comfort — which is where you're going to have a harder time persuading people to give up their idling. If it's 98 degrees out, and someone's waiting for her husband to finish shopping for the latest radial arm saw with the optional butt scratcher at Tools R Us, you can see why she might want to have the air conditioner running. But even then, she can turn off the engine, and when it starts to get uncomfortable, she can turn it back on for a few minutes to cool things off. Or how about this for an idea: Park in the shade!

Likewise, if it's 3 degrees out, a lot of people want to warm up their cars until the leather seats have thawed enough to conform to their butts, rather than feeling like rocks. And again, it's hard to argue with that, if that's how you want to spend your gas money. But I would point out that a car warms up faster when it's being driven, compared with sitting in a driveway.

On the other hand, your neighborhood trucker has no justification for running his cab for half an hour before or after driving it. Some diesel engines with turbochargers call for three to five minutes of idling before shutting down, to allow the turbo to cool off. But nothing calls for half an hour. And increasingly, jurisdictions are passing regulations prohibiting cars and trucks from idling, mostly because of the pollution it generates.

So my suggestion would be to have a talk with your trucker neighbor. Tell him you know he's just trying to make a living and you want to be a good neighbor, but the idling is too much. Tell him you'd be willing to overlook the regulations that prohibit 18-wheelers in your neighborhood if he'd be willing to limit the idling to no more than five minutes on either end.

Or, if he's a lot bigger than you, leave a note on his windshield, and sign it from another neighbor you don't like, then run. Good luck, Patrick.

If it ain't broke, you won't have to fix it! Order Click and Clack's pamphlet "Ten Ways You May Be Ruining Your Car Without Even Knowing It!" Send $4.75 (check or money order) to Car Talk/Ruin, 628 Virginia Drive, Orlando, FL 32803.

Sherrie Lewis Recognized For 35 Years Of Federal Service

"Working for USDA Rural Development has been such a rewarding and unbelievable journey," said Rural Development Community Program Specialist Sherrie Lewis. "I hope that I have made a difference in assisting to provide services in rural South Dakota such as healthcare, emergency services, clean & safe drinking water, sanitary sewers and economic growth."

Lewis was recently recognized by Bruce Jones, United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) Rural Development South Dakota Acting State Director, for 35 years of dedicated service to the federal government. The award was presented by her Supervisor, Doug Roehl. Lewis began her federal career in 1980 and has been with Rural Development the entire time. The greatest change for her was watching the structure of the agency reorganized from 41 field offices down to 7 over the span of her career. Basically, all programs are available at the field level and a lot of thinking outside of the box has occurred to make projects work.

"Sherrie works in each community as if she is a part of it. She strives to expand, improve, and expedite the services of Rural Development to rural South Dakota communities," said Jones. "In addition, she is a technical expert and a real asset to our agency and the communities."

Lewis is currently a Community Program Specialist in the Yankton Rural Development Office. Previous positions in the Agency were in Redfield, Watertown, and Vermillion. In addition, she is active with the National Association of Credit Specialists (NACS). NACS is a consultative employee association, organized in 1973, whose purpose is to initiate and promote improvements in the delivery system of Rural Development programs and services to rural America. Lewis commented that she was proud and honored in serving as the National President this past year. She has a deep admiration for the NACS members' drive and determination to make the process easier for our customers. Assignments are accepted as a responsibility and not just a job. Sherrie is also active with Habitat for Humanity, serving as the Family Services Chairperson for many years. She is involved at Trinity Lutheran Church as a member of the Youth and Family Board as well.

Sherrie's role model was her parents. "My dad was a hard worker, quick thinker and self-motivator. My mom was my best friend. She taught me humanity, humility, kindness and compassion," Lewis said. Sherrie resides in Yankton. She has three grown children and 13 grandchildren. In her free time, she loves to camp, hike, and spends time with her kids and grandkids.

USDA Rural Development in South Dakota has offices in Aberdeen, Huron, Mitchell, Pierre, Rapid City, Sioux Falls, Watertown, and Yankton. For more information, visit the USDA Rural Development website at http://www.rd.usda.gov/sd.

Digital Magazines Available Through Library

The Yankton Community Library, in partnership with RBDigital from Recorded Books, is pleased to announce the availability of Zinio for Libraries, the world's largest magazine newsstand.

Through the library's website at library.cityofyankton.org, patrons have unlimited multi-user access to complete digital magazines that are easily viewed on most Internet-enabled devices.

"We have been hoping to launch downloadable magazines for quite some time and are now able to do so through Zinio," said Yankton Community Library Director Kathy Wibbels. "It is an easy-to-use application that allows patrons unlimited access to the magazines we have subscribed to through the South Dakota Digital Group."

"Users should not have problems accessing the magazines, but if you do, don't hesitate to stop in the library and talk to one of the staff or call us at 668-5276. We are always happy to help."
