"I get asked the question a lot, 'Well, you must have it sort of figured out by now?' No," Fuld said. "There are so many different variables that go into it. Yeah, I certainly have a better grasp of it now than I did when I was first diagnosed. So many things change on a day-to-day basis. You're used to the constant mental stress that it involves. The blood, the finger pokes and the insulin shots are the easy part. It's the mental battle that's most grinding.'

been any episodes since Fuld joined Oakland at the trade deadline last summer from Minnesota.

"He does a great job with it, too. He's been a great resource for any athlete who's dealing with juvenile diabetes," Melvin said. "It's remarkable, really, for a professional athlete to be able to deal with it. I see what my daughter has to go through every day. .. It's a definite lifestyle. You have to be tough-minded because it's a difficult thing. It's pretty amazing to be able to do what Sam Fuld does.' Alexi Melvin posted a reminder about the A's root beer float day on her Twitter account. "I'll be scooping at the sugarfree table.. naturally," she wrote. Fuld, who wasn't in the lineup Wednesday night for the middle game against Toronto, is batting .207 with a home run, 11 doubles, a triple and 14 RBIs in 78 games for the A's.
