KAGAN

"It's not a coronation but a confirmation process," said Sessions. He said Kagan has "less real legal experience (than) any nominee in at least 50 years." And he said her stance on military recruitment violated the law — a legal conclusion disputed by the White House.

Kagan said her career has taught her about the importance of a modest court and open-mindedness when dealing with opposing views.

The Supreme Court "has the responsibility of ensuring that our government never oversteps its proper bounds or violates the rights of individuals. But the court must also recognize the limits on itself and respect the choices made by the American people," Kagan said. "I will do my best to consider every case impartially, modestly, with commitment to principle and in accordance with law."

Her remarks seemed designed to blunt conservatives' argument that she would bend the law to suit her own agenda — and also to reassure liberals that she would be a counterweight to what they characterize as a pro-business, conservative-dominated court that has done just that in recent years.

Republicans and Democrats alike used the hearing to rail against "judicial activism." The GOP, seeking to tap into tea party disgust with a federal government many members say has overstepped its bounds, has portrayed Kagan as a prime example of what they charge is Obama's desire to populate the nation's court with liberals willing to stretch the law to achieve preferred policy outcomes.

"Too often, it sounds to me like Ms. Kagan shares the view of President Obama and (former) Justice (Thurgood) Marshall that the Supreme Court exists to advance the agenda of certain classes of litigants," said Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz. "The burden is on the nominee to show that her record demonstrates she can be a fair and impartial justice rather than one who would have an outcome-based approach."

side of his vehicle."

Authorities pursued Wilson into Nebraska, but he eluded capture.

Wilson came close enough to striking the deputy that assault charges are being considered, Hunhoff stated. Wilson was last arrested for driving under the influence (third).

Hunhoff said Nebraska and South Dakota authorities are still attempting to apprehend Wilson.

Earlier in the weekend, Yankton police responded to an accident in the 2100 block of Broadway involving Curtis Wilson, 19, of Yankton.

A report was received at 11:27 p.m. Saturday that a 1994 Dodge Stealth had gone out of control, struck the bridge at Yankton Plaza, rolled many times and ultimately came to rest in Marne Creek south of the bridge.

During the incident, Wilson was ejected from the vehicle. He was transported by police to Avera Sacred Heart Hospital, and is not believed to have suffered life-threatening injuries, according to Assistant Police Chief Jerry Hisek.

He said speed was almost certainly a factor in the incident, and alcohol may also have been involved.

The vehicle was a total loss.
