of this stuff just really needs to be dealt with. It's not a question of stimulus."

The economists in the AP survey expect the economy to expand at a 2.3 percent annual pace this quarter, far less than their earlier 3.2 percent forecast. Their outlook for the July-September and October-December quarters and the full year has dimmed, too.

Since the economists were surveyed in April, the government has said that the economy grew at a scant 1.8 percent rate in the January-March period and that employers added just 54,000 jobs in April. In the previous three months, job growth had averaged 220,000.

The economists still expect growth to accelerate in the second half of the year. For all of 2011, they think the economy will expand 2.6 percent, down from their earlier estimate of 2.9 percent.

Their latest responses suggest that the economists underestimated how severely oil prices and Japan's earthquake and nuclear crisis would hurt the U.S. economy. Oil prices have jumped 26 percent over the past year. Twenty-six of the 38 economists surveyed described oil prices as a "major" problem for the economy.

these types of events," she continued. "I think it should be another entity doing that."

Mayor Dave Knoff said he would like to see at least the Boy Scouts be allowed to sell refreshments as they have done in the past.

"I'd be fine just offering it to the Boy Scout troop and just doing that this year," he said.

Commissioner Paul Lowrie said he would support having anyone who wants to sell something at the event apply for a vending permit.

"I wouldn't want to shut the door on anyone that may be out there," he said.

Russell said the Boy Scouts or anyone else would have to apply for a vending permit at the next City Commission meeting.

"Our recommendation would be for them to supply insurance, because of the nature of the event and for our own protection," he added.

In other business Monday, the commission:

• denied a request from MelCena Bernard to prohibit the public use of a couple parking stalls in front of the Riverfront Events Center along West Third Street. She operates a hotel with plans to operate more in the downtown area, and the central check-in is at the events center. Keeping the stalls open would allow guests to park there briefly while checking in to their hotel. It would also be a place for the events center to park its antique car or miniature train while preparing to give guests rides in them.

Several commissioners voiced concerns about setting a precedence where other businesses could also request, in Wenande's words, to "privatize" public parking stalls for their own use. Bernard countered that she is the only individual downtown who operates a hotel, and that most businesses want to keep parking open to customers;

• granted permission to move ahead with paving an alley just west of Walnut Street between Riverside Drive and Second Street in anticipation of Walnut Street in that area being closed off for pedestrian use only.
