ing the hectic first weeks of the effort, Daugaard said. About half the troops have been deactivated and sent home, and a smaller number will be kept to conduct security patrols for levees, he said.

The Republican governor said he's glad the Legislature agreed with him that reserve funds should not be used to pay for education, medical care and other ongoing expenses, but should be kept for emergencies.

"This is really the very thing the reserves are for in my mind, an emergency, one-time need. That's what this is," Daugaard said.

The state and city governments in Pierre, Fort Pierre and Dakota Dunes moved quickly to try to prevent or limit flooding in late May after the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers announced that record amounts of water would be released from the Missouri River dams to get rid of water from rains of up to 8 inches that fell in eastern Montana, northern Wyoming and western South Dakota and North Dakota. Melting snow in the Hisek noted.

"I've done it long enough," he said. "I hope I've made some type of difference. I have mixed feelings about it, but I'll deal with that as time goes on."

Hisek was among two finalists for the position of Yankton's police chief in the spring of 2010. However, Brian Paulsen was chosen to fill the opening left after Heene's departure.

Asked if he would be retiring had he been promoted to chief, Hisek said it is hard to say what would have occurred in that scenario.

"If I was in that position, there is probably a good chance that I would have stayed," he stated. "But that's not what happened, and I think it's easier for the whole department to move forward if there is a change. While I'm still here, I think it's harder for Chief Paulsen to move on and structure things the way he wants to do them."

Change is something that Hisek has grown accustomed to during his career with the department. When he began in the 1970s, the police worked out of City Hall and the city itself was much smaller.

"When you ran a license check back in those days, you called it in on the radio, and the dispatcher had a huge book with every license plate number in the county," Hisek recalled. "They would have to page through the book to find the number. If it was out of county or out of state plates, you'd have to call it in to the state radio, and they would teletype it back. Now, we can do it from our cars."

Cameras and radar units in every patrol vehicle are also changes he has witnessed — not to mention computers.

Hisek said he has been involved with homicides, (literal) goose chases and deer running through Yankton's downtown during the past 36 years.

"I wish I would have taken notes," he said. "I could have written a book."

Now, Hisek said he is looking forward to spending time with his wife, Cheryl, and the rest of his family, as well as fishing.

Hisek said he will miss the family he had at the police station.

"A lot of the time, you see more of the people in the department than you do your own family, depending on what shift you're on," he stated.

Hisek added that he hopes the leadership he provided is appreciated.

"I hope if someone had a question, I could give them an answer — even if it wasn't the one they wanted," he said. "I tried to be approachable and to do what I could for people. I've worked with departments around the state, and the people here are the best I've gotten to work with. They're concerned about the public, and the effect they have on the public. They take it to heart. It's been an interesting ride, and I've enjoyed it. It's with mixed feelings that I leave."

Although Hisek is a little apprehensive about the transition before him, his sense of humor is still intact.

"I hope people, when they see me on the street, still wave — with all their fingers," he said with a laugh.

Road

"Rules of the Road" will be held first from 9:30 a.m.-1:30 p.m.

The course is based on road signs, markings and traffic lights, and is designed to communicate motorist responsibilities necessary to comply with road traffic laws. The session will cover pre-driving checks, speed control, lane discipline, operation of controls, backing, lane changes, turn signals, railroad crossings, turns, traffic signs, space cushions, parking, mirrors, yielding, residential driving, blind spots, interstate travel, construction safety and communication with others.

"Alive at 25" will follow from 2 p.m.-6 p.m. and will cover the behaviors and decision-making practices that young drivers display behind the wheel. It is designed to prevent the top killer of young adults — automobile crashes.

"Normally, we like to offer a 'Rules of the Road'-type class and follow it up with a defensive driving class," Hall said. "Most of the time, the defensive driving class is not age specific, but this one is. It was specifically developed by the National Safety Council to help drivers age 24 and under."

The class will focus on consequences of decisions. Throughout the four-hour session, a series of videos, conversations and reading material will cover real-life situations that have occurred in the past, the choices made by people involved, and the civil, criminal and emotional consequences of those choices.

Hall said one particular area affects young drivers more than others.

"We have found that the emotional consequences — how people feel once this has happened to them — really are much more persuasive to the age group we are trying to target," she said. "The large dollar amount from losing a civil or criminal case doesn't seem to have the same impact on the younger people. We've been very successful focusing on the emotional consequences."

While the goal of the day is to help beginners drive smarter, Hall said there are possible financial benefits from completing the courses as well.

"It is dependent on each company, but there are several insurance companies that offer a discount for continued education in traffic, particularly the 'Alive at 25' program," she said.

The cost covers both "Rules of the Road" and "Alive at 25." The classes are limited to 25 participants.

Donate Used Cell Phones To Local Women's Center

The Yankton Women's and Children's Center is asking the public to donate its used cell phones.

The donated cell phones will be recycled, and the money earned from each recycled phone will be used to help the victims of domestic violence.

The center will accept all cell phones, working and non-functioning. If possible, you are asked to place a functioning cell phone in a small bag with a charger and/or other accessories. These phones will be given to victims to use as emergency 911 phones.

You can drop off your old cell phone(s) at Hy-Vee, the Yankton Community Library or the First Dakota Bank drive-thru.
