but use has been a little on the lighter side," he said. "But it's plum full for this weekend and the Fourth of July weekend.

With Independence Day falling on a Monday this year, VanMeeteren looks for people to take advantage of the built-in three-day weekend.

"Usually, having a Monday holiday is a good thing. People have a lot of strategy for things like the Fourth (of July)," he said. "Usually, people tend to make it more of a vacation time and take the whole week off. I guess, we are hoping that will be the case if the weather straightens out.

"People may start vacation on Thursday and Friday, then camp the whole weekend into the Fourth of July on Monday."

Campers and other visitors will find less debris on the beaches, as park employees spent a great deal of time during the past two weeks scouring the area, VanMeeteren said.

"With Monday night's wind storm, we had a lot of branches down. It took 2 1/2 days to pick up branches," he said. "While we were doing that (clean-up), we noticed the beaches aren't loaded up with a lot of material."

Monday night's storm didn't result in serious injuries, VanMeeteren said. "It was a good, strong wind. We seem to get those (storms) twice a year," he said.

While Lewis and Clark Lake remains open for business, VanMeeteren said park employees still urge boaters to use caution.

"Because the lake is (part of) a river, you never know what might be in it," he said. "The other thing, they start ramping up some of the releases at Fort Randall. Here at Lewis and Clark Lake, we don't know if it will generate more debris. We hope not, but we're waiting to see."

The Army Corps of Engineers plans to raise the Fort Randall releases to 145,000 cubic feet per second (cfs) Friday and hold that level on Saturday. The Corps then plans to ramp up the releases to 152,000 cfs Sunday and 157,000 cfs Monday.

The coming days will affect decisions on facilities, VanMeeteren said.

"We're touch and go on the Springfield campgrounds," he said. "Right now, the north half is open. The other half has some water on the campground loop, so we didn't open it. We will see what the next four or five days brings us here, and hopefully, we can continue to have half the campground."

The higher Fort Randall releases will have a greater impact on the upper reach areas such as Springfield and Randall Creek rather than the larger Lewis and Clark Lake itself, VanMeeteren said.

"After this weekend, we'll know a lot more," he said.

Last year was a record season, which makes it a tough act to follow, VanMeeteren said.

"We got off to a slow start this year. April was horrible weather wise, and May wasn't much better, at least the first three-fourths of the month," he said. "Memorial Day came and was very good. We had solid numbers, but the flooding started right after Memorial Day."

The combination has made for a tough first half of the season, VanMeeteren said.

"Between the weather not being the best always, and maybe the uncertainty with people — the rumors that the lake was in trouble, we're not going to see as good a numbers this June as last year," the regional park supervisor said.

Despite such challenges, the camping and visitor numbers have remained strong, VanMeeteren said. And he remains optimistic about a strong finish now that summer has officially arrived.

He senses a pent-up demand among people wanting to get away for outdoor fun after a spring filled with flooding and other trying times.

This weekend, followed by a strong Fourth of July weekend, would provide a great springboard for the rest of the summer, he said.

He does have one request. "We would obviously like to get some sunshine," he said with a chuckle.

Work To Begin On Intersection In Yankton

The South Dakota Department of Transportation will begin work on S.D. Highway 52 in Yankton from the 8th St./Summit Ave./S.D. Highway 52 intersection to West City Limits Road on June 24, 2011.

Attorney General Warns Of Charitable Scams

PIERRE — Attorney General Marty Jackley is asking South Dakotans to beware of scam artists potentially exploiting flood victims from South Dakota. These scam artists typically show up after disasters and pose as charities to collect money from those who are willing to help.

"South Dakotans reaching out with their generosity to fellow citizens recovering from the devastation of the flood waters should take some simple precautions to ensure their assistance is directed to those in need," said Jackley. "It is disheartening, but scam artists often use these types of disasters to take advantage of those who simply want to help."

Here are a few tips to avoid becoming a victim:

- Verify the legitimacy of the nonprofit organization as well as its nonprofit status. Visit such sites as www.charitynavigator.org or www.guidestar.org.
- Ask specifically how this donation will be used.
- Ask how much of your donation will go to the charity and how much will be used to pay fund raising costs.
- Consider giving to charitable organizations with a strong history in providing disaster relief.
- Beware of charitable organizations that use sound like names of legitimate companies.
- Donors should not respond to any unsolicited emails, but rather go directly to recognized charities or aid organizations.
- Do not pay cash. For security reasons write a check.
- If you want additional information about the charity ask that they send it to you in writing. Any legitimate company will be more than happy to provide this information to verify their legitimacy.

For more information about charitable giving, contact the South Dakota Attorney General's Consumer Protection Division at 1-800-300-1986 or www.state.sd.us/attorney.
