town on being a public information officer.

"(My wife, Kari) and I talked about how I could utilize the skills and experience that I gained in a 16-year radio career," he stated. "This became a way to utilize the skills and contacts that I gained as a member of the media on the other side of the microphone, so to speak. I'm using what I know about what the media needs and wants, as well as how it works, to assist the people in that field."

A reorganization in the structure of the emergency management office made Rettig one of three deputy directors under the director. Paul Scherschligt is the current director.

The demands upon the county's emergency management office since releases from the Missouri River mainstem dams began increasing in late May have made the last month the busiest of Rettig's tenure. A mostly part-time position has now become a 12-16-hour a day job.

He helps to disseminate information to the public, as well as the media, about emergency management efforts and other pertinent flooding information.

This week, Rettig was dispatched to Dakota Dunes as part of a state incident management assistance team.

"In the Dunes, I'm answering questions that homeowners have about de-watering areas, sump pumps, flood maps and other resources," he said. "There is a lot more homeowner contact (than in Yankton), because there are a lot more homeowners who are affected down there. At the same time, I'm working with the media and helping them get their stories."

The work can be taxing, Rettig said, because he often has to deliver bad news to property owners.

"I'm the person who has to give it to them straight," he stated. "That's the tough part, to have to look someone in the eye and say, 'I'm sorry for your plight, but it's not going to get better anytime soon.' I've had to say that because it is the truth. I sometimes have to be the bad guy in the whole operation because I have to do that."

Still, Rettig said he has never regretted making the leap from one side of the microphone to the other.

"I'm glad that my careers in construction and real estate are flexible enough where I'm able to do this," he said. "My wife says to me that she can really tell I'm in my element. I'm really excited about it. She is the one who tells me I need to go ahead and do this because I really enjoy it."

ple have called Larry their hero. It's been a very good response," Villarreal said.

The first leg of the ride will extend from Aberdeen to Webster, followed by treks from Webster to Watertown, Watertown to Brookings, Brookings to Sioux Falls, and Sioux Falls to Beresford/Vermillion, respectively.

Smith and specialists from Sanford Health will speak to Parkinsons groups at each stop along the way. Members of these groups will be able to submit their names to win a Catrike like Smith's, the drawing for which will be held at the final ceremony in Vermillion, which is set to take place from 12-2:30 p.m. in the plaza at the corner of Main and Market.

"It's all to promote the benefits of exercise for Parkinson's patients, and just so that people can see the big improvement it has done for Larry," Villarreal said.

Cyclists are also encouraged to sign up online to ride along with Smith, with a portion of the proceeds from their participation going toward the Davis Phinney Foundation.

Smith and his wife have been training for the tour for about a year. Since January, they have attended a spinning class - a vigorous style of stationary bicycling - at the Wellness Center at the University of South Dakota.

"We get on these bicycles ... and we have a slave-driver as a coach, and he has really gotten us going," Smith said. "I'm at the height of physical health, which is ironic, because I've never been so sick in my life as I am right now with Parkinson's. But I feel good."

"It was great during the winter, because when the snow was high he could go to spinning class, and that's how they were really able to bump up their training," Skow said.

Smith also rides to and from work each day, as well as other rides throughout the week.

"I take it out as often as I can and ride 10, 15, 20 miles," he said.

Smith has been cycling for the past 20 years or so, but said he "got more into it" in the past six when he found out it helped relieve his Parkinson's.

"They've found through research that biking does improve the condition of people with Parkinson's," he said. "But the trouble was, (with a two-wheel bike) I would occasionally crash. For no apparent reason I would just fall off the bike and pulverize myself on the sidewalk."

Then one of Smith's friends showed him a recumbent Catrike bike. He bought one of his own soon after.

Villarreal said he hopes the finished film will not only help to portray Smith's story, but give viewers a deeper understanding of Parkinson's as a disorder.

"Parkinson's is still one of those conditions that people don't really know well," he said. "They don't understand it. So, with this film we also are trying to ... inform people better what Parkinson's is all about. ..."

"The whole message, I guess, is regardless of the situation you have, you can live life to the fullest," he said. "You can still do a lot with your life. Someone with Parkinson's doesn't necessarily have to be destined to (live in) a wheelchair for the rest of their life."

The film may be completed by early 2012. Even though it isn't finished, the footage that has been made available online already has touched a vast number of people, Skow said.

"We got a lot of messages not necessarily from people with Parkinson's, but (who) found inspiration from the story," she said.

"I think it's more perspirational than inspirational," Smith joked.

Along with Skow and Villarreal, other members of the film crew include co-director/producer Andrew Rubin, producer Matt Rubin and executive producer Stephen Nemeth.

Boyfriend Ordered To Remove Billboard

ALAMOGORDO, N.M. (AP) — A state district judge Thursday ordered an Alamogordo man to immediately take down a billboard that implies his ex-girlfriend had an abortion.

State District Judge James Counts issued the ruling as part of protective order the woman sought after Greg Fultz, 35, took out the sign on the city's main thoroughfare in mid-May. The billboard shows Fultz holding the outline of an infant. The text reads, "This Would Have Been A Picture Of My 2-Month Old Baby If The Mother Had Decided To Not KILL Our Child!"

Fultz's ex-girlfriend has taken him to court for harassment and violation of privacy. A domestic court official had recommended the billboard be removed.

But Fultz's attorney said his client is adamant about protecting his free speech rights and will appeal.

"He said he is prepared to go to jail for this," attorney Todd Holmes said.

"His position is that this billboard is not really about her. It's about his statement of fathers' rights."
