Women’s Summer Bible Study Begins June 6

Calvary Baptist Church, Yankton, will offer a women’s summer Bible study entitled “Set Apart” by best-selling author Jennifer Kennedy Dean, starting June 6.

“Set Apart” is a six-week interactive study which examines: holiness, happiness, and the Beatitudes, the Lord’s Prayer, the promise of blessedness in Christ’s Sermon on the Mount. You were made for holiness, a core concept of the Beatitudes, which is accessed through a praying life—a life lived in the present-tense power of God. It is only when you continually pursue holiness that blessedness comes, and you discover the power and fulfillment of the promise of God. Unlike a circumstance-driven emotion such as happiness, blessedness is eternal and grounded in the reality of Christ in you. You are able to live in the state of blessedness that God has created for you when you discover the key to true holiness — a call to freedom and joy.

All women from the community (including high school young ladies) are invited to attend at 9 a.m. Wednesday mornings in the Youth Theater beginning June 6 (no child care available) or Thursday evenings at 7 p.m. beginning June 7 in the Youth Theater (child care is available by reservation). Call the church office at 605-665-5594 to register and to answer any questions.

Missouri County Commissioner Stops Saying Prayers At Meetings In Wake Of Lawsuit

BY STEPHEN DEERE
St. Louis Post-Dispatch (MCT)

ST. LOUIS — The meeting on Tuesday began with a moment of silence — but no prayer.

Franklin County Presiding Commissioner John Griesheimer appeared to have, at least temporarily, ceded to demands from the American Civil Liberties Union of Eastern Missouri that he stop offering “sectarian” prayers at commission meetings.

In previous months, Griesheimer had prayed for rain, for the unemployed, and even for St. Louis Cardinals to win games. Typically he prayed “in Jesus’ name.”

But on this day, and at other recent meetings, Griesheimer had stopped praying publicly.

All because of a woman whose identity few know.

“I personally didn’t have a problem with” the prayers, said Tim Baker, of Robertsville, who attended the meeting on Tuesday and is running for a commission seat later this year. “But someone did, and that’s a shame.”

That person complained to the ACLU, which sued the county and the three-member Franklin County Commission this month. The suit argues that Griesheimer violated the Consti-tution’s prohibition on government backing a religion.

ACLU attorney Anthony Rothert said the resident who complained is afraid of being harassed and wants to remain anonymous.

Government bodies, including Congress, often begin meetings with an invocation. Yet it’s pastors, priests, rabbis and other religious leaders who typically offer those prayers, not government leaders themselves.

Rothert has little objection to public prayers given by those outside government, assuming that the name of a particular god is not invoked.

“If it’s an outsider, it’s less attributable to the government,” he said. “If they only invite Christian ministers, that’s probably problematic.”

Some Franklin County residents aren’t happy that Griesheimer’s prayers have been snuffed out. At previous commission meetings, two people have stood up and prayed during the public comment portion.

“We took it up ourselves,” said Eric Reichert, one of those residents. “Maybe (the commissioners) can’t, but we can damn sure (pray) ourselves.”

Prayers at public meetings aren’t hard to find in other counties, though it’s religious leaders who handle the task.

Terri Kreitler, a Jefferson County councilwoman who coordinates the county’s invocations, said both pastors and priests have given prayers. Kreitler said she wants to be inclusive and has even searched for a rabbi in the area.

“But I haven’t found one yet,” she said.

St. Charles County also invites local pastors for an invocation at county council meetings. John Sonderegger, a county spokesman, acknowledged that the invocations were “mainly a Christian thing” but said he wasn’t aware of any complaints.

The issue of prayer and government has been the subject of high-profile cases lately. Earlier this month, the town of Greece in upstate New York was found by a federal appeals court to have violated the Constitution by opening meetings with prayers that almost always were Christian.

In January, Forsyth County in North Carolina made headlines when the Supreme Court rejected an appeal of a ruling that banned sectarian prayer at the county’s board of commissioners.

Franklin County leaders don’t appear to want a long, drawn-out legal battle. Residents say Griesheimer, a former state senator who was elected to the county commission in 2010, stopped praying before meetings just after the county received a demand letter from the ACLU a few weeks ago. He even requested that audience members refrain from praying at commission meetings, they said.

Rothert noted that the commission has a rule preventing the public from speaking to items not on the agenda “but they didn’t enforce it.” He said if it’s true that Griesheimer has asked people to stop praying at the meetings, then the lawsuit should be nearly resolved. The ACLU is seeking attorney fees, but at this point, those fees are only “a couple of hundred dollars,” he said.

After Tuesday’s meeting, Griesheimer declined to comment. The other two commissioners, Terry Wilson and Ann Schroeder, did not return calls seeking comment.

Franklin County resident Art LeBeau, who often attends the commission meetings, disagrees with Griesheimer on many issues, but said he supports him on praying.

He wishes he could figure out the identity of the anonymous woman. He would like to talk to her, though he isn’t sure what he would say.

“I would do a lot of prayer first,” he said.
