USD Researchers Receive Nelson Grant

VERMILLION — University of South Dakota researchers Gina Forster and Ranjit Koodali are the recipients of a $12,000 grant from the Nelson Faculty Research Grant Committee of the USD Graduate School for their proposal, "Developing Nanotechnology to Deliver Neuropeptides to the Brain."
 Forster, Ph.D., associate professor of basic biomedical sciences, and Koodali, Ph.D., associate professor of chemistry, are working together to develop a different drug delivery method for the anti-anxiety drug anti-sauvagine (ASV). In addition to developing a new delivery method for ASV, the project will utilize the assistance of undergraduate and graduate students in the lab and provides an opportunity for additional funding through the National Institute of Health.
 "The overall quality of the experimental design, student involvement and the potential for external funding were considered excellent reasons to award the 2012 Nelson Endowment Faculty Research Grant to this project," stated Laurie J. Becvar, Senior Associate Provost and Dean of the USD Graduate School. "Moreover, the interdisciplinary collaboration between the two outstanding faculty members from bio-medical science and chemistry meets the tenants of the memorandum of understanding for this endowment."

 The endowment for this award was created through the generosity of Joseph F. Nelson and Martha P. Nelson and provides grant monies for fostering interdisciplinary research at USD.
 Forster's research interests include the study of neurobiology that underlies anxiety states and addiction. Her National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA) funded research examines the neurobiological and behavioral interaction between stress and drug abuse, with a major focus on monoamine and neuroen-doctrine systems and anxiety behaviors. Forster's collaboration with Drs. Raluca Gaher and Jeffrey Simons in the USD Department of Psychology is conducting Department of Defense funded research to understand the behavioral, cognitive and neural associations between post-traumatic stress disorder and alcohol use and abuse in veterans.

 Koodali's research is funded by the National Science Foundation — South Dakota Experimental Program to Stimulate Competitive Research (EPSCoR), Department of Energy (DOE), and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA). His research is focused on the development of novel materials for applications ranging from antibacterial activity, catalysis, drug delivery, environmental remediation, to solar energy conversion and storage and thermal insulators.

Use Insect Repellent, Support Local Mosquito Control Efforts To Prevent Spread Of WNV

PIERRE — South Dakotans can do their part to prevent West Nile virus (WNV) by getting in the habit of using insect repellent, says a state health official.
 "West Nile virus might seem less of a concern now that South Dakota has 10 years' experience with it but it would be a mistake to think the virus isn't a threat," said Dr. Lon Kightlinger, State Epidemiologist for the South Dakota Department of Health. "West Nile virus can be a serious, even fatal, illness and we need to prevent it."
 South Dakota has reported 1,759 cases, including 26 deaths, since its first case in 2002. There have been cases in every county.
 Kightlinger said the department's surveillance is underway this year as well but all mosquito pools tested so far have been negative for the virus. Nationally, 10 states have reported WNV detections in mosquitoes or animals; only Texas has reported a human case.

 To prevent mosquito bites and reduce the risk of WNV, the Department of Health recommends the following personal precautions:
 Use mosquito repellents (DEET, picaridin, oil of lemon eucalyptus, or IR3535) and limit exposure by covering up.
 Limit time outdoors from dusk to midnight when Culex mosquitoes are most active.
 Get rid of standing water that gives mosquitoes a place to breed.
 Support local mosquito control efforts.
 Personal precautions are especially important for those at high risk for WNV — people over 50, pregnant women, transplant patients, individuals with diabetes or high blood pressure, and those with a history of alcohol abuse. People with a severe or unusual headache should see their physician.

 West Nile cases have occurred as early as June in South Dakota but peak transmission is July through early September.
 Learn more about WNV prevention on the department's website, http://westnile.sd.gov, or the SDSU Cooperative Extension Service site at http://www.sdstate.edu/sdces/issues/wnv.cfm.
