Bishops Defend Sparring With Obama Over Contraception Mandate

BY MITCHELL LANDSBERG

© 2012, Los Angeles Times

ATLANTA — Stung by criticism that they are engaging in partisan attacks in a presidential campaign, the nation's Roman Catholic bishops insisted Wednesday that their fight with President Barack Obama has nothing to do with party politics or contraception, and everything to do with what they see as a fundamental assault on religious liberty.

The bishops did not shrink from attacking the administration in a dispute that has become their signature issue, one involving what Bishop Stephen Blaire of Stockton, Calif., called "the most serious intrusion of government that we have ever experienced."

One speaker at the annual spring meeting of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops went so far as to compare the situation confronting the American church to the one that faced Thomas More, the Catholic saint who was beheaded in the 16th century for refusing to accept the supremacy of the English king over the pope.

"We protect the freedom of religion because we think it is wrong to coerce belief," said John Garvey, the president of Catholic University. "Thomas More's story shows what can happen when those protections break down."

The battle that has led to such charged rhetoric is over provisions in the president's health care plan that mandate contraception coverage in private health insurance, including plans that cover employees of church-affiliated institutions such as hospitals and universities.

Although surveys have shown that the vast majority of Catholic women use birth control, and numerous major Catholic institutions have long provided contraception coverage to their employees, the church considers it to be morally wrong.

After an initial eruption of dissent from the bishops and many Catholic organizations, Obama announced a compromise this year that satisfied many moderate Catholics by shifting the burden of providing contraception from the employers to their insurance companies. The bishops, however, were not mollified.

They object not only to the idea that Catholic institutions will be complicit in dispensing contraception, but also to the reason that the institutions are not being exempted from the rule altogether, as churches and diocesan offices are. The government's definition of an exempt religious institution requires that most of its employees and, even more controversial, most of the people it serves are members of the same faith.

That definition, the bishops say, suggests a misunderstanding of the Christian impulse to help others, regardless of their background.

The Catholic bishops have powerful allies in the battle, including major organizations of conservative Christian evangelicals. Also on their side is Republican presidential hopeful Mitt Romney, who has accused Obama of being broadly antagonistic to religion.

The president has denied that religious liberty is at stake and has framed the contraception issue as one involving women's health and reproductive freedom. Many liberal and moderate religious groups agree and support his handling of the matter.

Some Catholic commentators in recent weeks have criticized the bishops for thrusting themselves into a partisan campaign and have expressed concern that the church is giving short shrift to other issues, such as the plight of immigrants and the poor.

Catholic doctrine has never easily coexisted with either of the major party platforms. The church tends to side with Republicans on abortion and same-sex marriage, and with Democrats on health care, social justice and immigration reform.

Catholic voters form one of the largest blocs of swing voters and will be central to the election strategy of Romney and Obama. Obama won the Catholic vote in 2008, but recent tracking polls show Catholics almost evenly split between the candidates.

At the opening day of their spring meeting, the bishops scarcely mentioned immigration reform, once a front-burner topic. They did vote on a motion by Blaire, the Stockton bishop, to draft a message on "Work, Poverty and a Broken Economy" and heard a report on progress in combating sexual abuse by priests.

That report praised the church's safeguards and urged continued vigilance. It found, however, that there had been an increase in "boundary violations" by priests, which it defined as behavior such as improper touching or tickling. It said many of the violations were by foreign-born clergy, suggesting they might be explained by cultural differences.

"This issue needs to be investigated more thoroughly," the report said.

Still, it was clear that the bishops' overriding concern was the birth control mandate.

"I would right now like us to see all of our energy directed at every level, whether it's at the executive, the legislative or the judicial, to changing that," said Cardinal Donald Wuerl of Washington, D.C. "Once that has been resolved, we can get on with the rest of our work."

Simple Rules To Live By

BY BOB CAPPEL

Associate Pastor, First United Methodist Church

There isn't a day that goes by that we don't see, hear or read about the events that remind us of problems in the world. You began to concern yourself with how do we reverse this trend that seems to be imbedded in the frame work of our society. While we do have leaders from various sectors who have come to the forefront in an effort to make a difference, by taking on these challenges, sometimes it appears they aren't making any headway. So, the longer these events occur we see ourselves with insurmountable odds in turning the situation around. While we see the problems escalating, sadly we just throw up our hands and say it is the other person's problem. Also, the more it happens in our communities and the longer it impacts us, we begin to gain a reputation that isn't positive and we then take the attitude that we can't do anything about it.

But, there is! It all starts with us; you and me to make a difference. One person at a time. We need to return to the days when we live everyday with God in the center of our lives—not drugs, not alcohol, not replacing Sunday morning worship service with recreation and sports, etc. It truly is simple; each one of us needs to follow some really simple rules! I'd like to share with you three simple rules to live by that would get us back to those days when God was the strength of our life. Three rules! John Wesley proclaimed and was expounded upon in a book by United Methodist Bishop Rueben P. Job entitled "Three Simple Rules: A Wesleyan Way of Living." If all of us would make these simple rules as a way to live our lives, think about the changes that we could see in our lives, our community, our country, and even around the world.

The first one Wesley named is "Do No Harm!" Sounds simple enough, but unfortunately our society just can't get it right sometimes. Doing no harm means we need to be more concerned about the words that come from our lips or the actions or reactions we exhibit during an encounter with another person. Too many times a disagreement can get out of hand and the next thing you know harsh words are spoken by the parties involved. Consider the number of times in 2012 that you may have already offended someone because you said the wrong thing or did something that hurt someone's feelings. In the scripture Galatians 5:15, Paul writes, "But if you are always biting and devouring one another, watch out! Beware of destroying one another." When we believers lose the motivation of love, we become critical of others. Remind yourself of Jesus' command to love others as you love yourself.

The second simple rule is "Do Good!" Again, another commandment that sounds simple enough. Jesus instructs his disciples (John 13:34), "So now I am giving you a new commandment; Love each other. Just as I have loved you, you should love each other." During the year there are times, like around Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays when there is an abundance of "good" being done in our community. Or, when we see a special appeal for someone or an effort. The public does respond to the needs of many. We should make this doing-good a year-long part of our lives. Those opportunities will cross our paths throughout the year.

The third rule is "Stay in Love with God!" First, one needs to know God. Then, to have that close and personal relationship (staying in love with God), John Wesley names these common essentials for all of us: daily time of prayer; reflection upon and study of Scripture; regular participation in the life of a Christian community, including weekly worship and regular participation in the Lord's Supper; doing some acts of goodness or mercy; and taking opportunities to share with and learn from others who seek to follow the way of Jesus. These are essential to a faithful life. In John 21, Simon Peter was asked three times about his love for Jesus. Each time his answer was, "Yes, Lord." How is your love for God? If you have moved away from church, from God, now is the time to adopt these simple rules and make them the center of your life. You can't go wrong and they will have a long standing effect on you and those around you!
