from common bait species.

We realize the emergency ruling is affecting anglers," he said. "However, it is a necessary step to help protect the integrity of resources and the health of fisheries in the area.'

Geno Adams, Fisheries Program Administrator for the GF&P, hopes the ruling will have a significant impact on the Asian Carp.

"I hope the ruling will inhibit ceived at 4:12 a.m. Tuesday that a the movement of Asian Carp," he said. "This is a new and upcoming Aquatic Nuisance Species in South Dakota that is spreading incredibly rapidly."

He noted that Asian Carp are such a big problem because they eat many of the same things that other young species also feed on. Because of this, they have a huge impact on other species' populations.

The Silver and Big Head Carp are known to feed on Zooplankton in lakes and rivers, something that other fish species rely on for food.

"When the Asian Carp eat enough Zooplankton, it becomes unavailable to other fish species who have poor natural production," Lott said. "This causes the population of Asian Carp to go up, and other species' populations to go down. Lott added, once Asian Carp are introduced, they become very difficult to get rid of, not only because they can spread so rapidly, but also because they are very prolific reproducers some female Asian Carp can have up to 4 million eggs, compared to up to 100,000 on a Walleye.

In addition to the ecological problems that Asian Carp present, they also pose an injury risk to citizens out on local bodies of water.

"Asian Carp are known to jump out of the water if they are startled," Lott said. "This is a safety issue and can cause serious injury to people on boats and in the water."

However, officials in South Dakota are hoping the steps being taken in the state will help to solve the problem.

Officials hope that, in addition to laws and regulations, information and education will help the problem. "Knowing about the issue and in schools and anglers is huge," Lott said. He added that each year has the potential to have strong pro-its importance of stopping the spread of Asian Carp to children duction of Asian Carp. Adams agreed, adding, "Education and outreach is huge to stop the spread." He noted the importace of angling in South Dakota.

Angling is important to local economies," he said. "Asian Carp can do a number on fish populations, so there are a lot of reasons to care about stopping them from spreading.' Adams noted that other states have had to result to more desperate, and more costly, measures to deal with the problem. He's hoping that steps being taken now will be enough to stop the Asian Carp from spreading any further in the state. "Other states, including Illinois, are spending millions of dollars to stop the spread," he said. "It is in the best interest of everyone in South Dakota not to have to do that.'

He went on to say the sport fishing industry in Illinois has taken a huge hit because of the Asian Carp, and hopes that does not happen in South Dakota.

"People should take this seriously," Adams added.

Anglers who observe or capture a Silver or Bighead Carp outside of the James, Vermillion and Big Sioux Rivers, and below Gavins Point Dam, are encouraged to report their findings to the GF&P website or by calling their local GF&P office.

bucket or a trash can. The use of safety glasses and proper lighting devices is also a good safety measure, he said.

"Use the lighting punks that they give you," Nickles said. "I have seen people use a small torch before, which works, but you have to be careful that nothing tips over or anything like that.'

The dry conditions have also sparked some concern.

In a recent press release, Assistant Chief of Operations for South Dakota Division of Wildfire Suppression Jim Strain said the the possibility of fireworks displays causing fast-moving wildfires has increased significantly because of recent hot and dry weather in parts of the state. The current fire danger is expected to be in the moderate or above category, he said and is asking residents and visitors to the state to use extreme precautions when shooting fireworks.

Strain said one of the most dangerous types of fireworks is bottle rockets, because of the debris, and said people should pay close attention when using those fireworks. If a fire does start, Nickles said it should be called in right away.

"Don't run off and leave it," he said. "We've had that happen several times, where a fire starts and people leave and don't report it. We understand that it's an accident if a fire starts and that it's going to happen." It is also a good idea to take a shovel or when people do shoot off fireworks, in case a fire does start, to put it out. Yankton County Sheriff Jim Vlahakis said people should be aware of where they are shooting fireworks. "Most of the state parks don't allow it," he said. "It is also a crime to shoot fireworks out of cars.

Throwing any burning object from a motor vehicle is a crime, and the crime is dangerous." Throwing fireworks from a vehicle, shooting them at people or shooting them at vehicles or structures is also illegal, he said. In the Yankton area, people will shoot a lot of fireworks in the river area, Nickles said.

People will go out on the sandbars and things like that to shoot fireworks," he said. "Actually, the conditions are right for that right now, because people can get out and stand on the sandbars.

Nickles said shooting in the campground areas is not allowed by state policy, and shooting off the face of the dam is not allowed by Corps policy.

Nickles biggest concern other than general firework safety is for people to use caution about where they shoot their fireworks and how they use them.

We don't want any property damage and we'd like to have our firefighters enjoy the 4th of July weekend too, not just out chasing fires the whole weekend," he said. 'They'll be there when we need them, though.'

expecting more jobs in the months ahead declined to 14.1 percent from 15.4 percent. The proportion of consumers expecting an increase in their incomes declined to 14.8 percent from 15.7 percent. Consumers' dwindling confidence since February corresponds with a sharp slowdown in hiring. Hiring averaged 96,000 during the combined period of March, April and May. That marked a slowdown from the average of 252,000 a month in the prior three months.

The strong hiring during the winter helped lift the Consumer Confidence Index from 40.9 in October to the highest reading it had been in a year during February. But in the following months that hiring has slipped, so has consumer confidence.
