Spring means it's recital season for the two dance organizations in Yankton. LEFT: Students at Judi's Dance Studio are shown rehearsing for their Memorial Day weekend performance at the Summit Activities Center in May. (Hertz) RIGHT: Meanwhile, these young performers from the Academy of Dance work on their moves during this dress rehearsal in May. (Hertz)

Spring brought some colorful outdoor adventures in Yankton. LEFT: Mount Marty College hosted a "Run in Color" fundraising event that featured groups of runners being bathed with colored chalk at various checkpoints on and near the MMC campus. Afterwards, leaf blowers were used to remove the chalk from the colorful participants. (Hertz) RIGHT: The Missouri River Water Festival at Yankton in May offered educational stations in which participants could get an up-close look at nature — such as with this fish, which one educator seemed a bit hesitant to embrace. (Dockendorf)

ABOVE: Area law enforcement took part in a drill organized at the Yankton Federal Prison Camp in April in which members were able to deal with emergency situations such as a hostage crisis. In this photo, one of the hostage takers surrenders and his handcuffed by police personnel. (Hertz) RIGHT: Christian music artist Matt Maher was in the spotlight during his headlining performance at Mount Marty College's Laddie E. Cimpl Arena in April. (Hertz)

Springtime weather brought a diverse array of conditions, including (thankfully) moisture. ABOVE: This couple bundled up for the soggy elements as they drove their tractor through the Fordyce, Neb., centennial parade in June. (Hoeck) RIGHT TOP: One of the meteorological surprises of the spring for Yankton was a 2-inch snowfall on May 1, the first measurable snowfall recorded on that date. Fortunately, it was gone two hours later. (Hertz) RIGHT BOTTOM: The weather conditions were just fine for the annual Easter Egg Hunt at Sertoma Park in Yankton in March. (Hoeck)
