Nolz

drug awareness and prevention.
 South Dakota Elks Association Drug Awareness Program Chair John Cornette of Yankton said that Nolz met those criteria.
 "(Nolz) exemplifies what we want our police officers to be," Yankton Police Chief Brian Paulsen said during the ceremony.
 Nolz can be counted on to make good decisions on his feet and is always ready to give drug awareness demonstrations with his K-9 unit, named Grief, according to Paulsen.

 "Officer Nolz supports our youth by doing K-9 demonstrations for D.A.R.E., Safety Town and other special events," Yankton Police Sgt. Jason Foote wrote of Nolz in a nomination letter for the award. "(He) uses these opportunities to deliver a message to the youth about the importance of being drug free and living in a drug-free community."
 Lt. Michael Burgeson added in his own letter that Nolz "has proven that one person can make a difference in the war on drugs."

 Nolz is also a team leader on the police department's special response team and a captain in the Yankton Fire Department.
 "I can say that I thoroughly enjoy my job. It's fun going to work," Nolz said.
 Although being a dog handler requires much more work than he imagined when took on the position in 2007, he called working with Grief "fulfilling."
 "The dog has opened doors for us in more ways than one," he said. "He is a valuable tool. We do demos all the time."
 Nolz became a police officer in 2004.

 "I wish I had gotten into it years before that," he said. "I got started on it late in life."
 Born and raised in Yankton, Nolz said he loves the community and is committed to keeping illicit substances off the streets.
 "It hurts to see the (drugs) on the street and the people getting into it," he said. "It seems to get worse and worse."

Moser

uate admissions office.
 Moser led the office in securing funding, coordinating hiring and training. She also helped develop, implement and analyze recruitment trends. Moser was appointed to the university marketing committee and worked collaboratively with advertising agencies to develop the USD's branding image.
 "We were looking for someone who had marketing, organizational and people skills," said Carmen Schramm, the executive director of the Yankton Area Chamber of Commerce and Moser's supervisor. "The individual also needed to be high energy, because the job requires a lot of creative thought and organizational pieces. Stephanie, with her recruitment and admissions background, had a lot of those qualities."

 Schramm was part of the six-person committee that hired Moser. The Chamber, the City of Yankton and the CVB council each had two representatives.
 Twelve applications were received for the CVB position, according to Schramm.
 The Yankton CVB is a not-for-profit organization dedicated to promoting travel and conference to the Yankton area. Visitors and conference attendees spend more than $18 million in gross revenue annually in Yankton County and more than 895 jobs are supported by the travel industry locally.
 The CVB manages the "Visit Yankton" brand and website, and serves as the primary marketing agent for the Yankton area. It also facilitates meeting requests for conference services for area hotels.

 "We want more people to come to Yankton," Schramm stated of the objectives of the CVB. "The main focus is to work on shoulder seasons and to research groups that are the size we can handle with our meeting facilities."
 Funding opportunities to support expanded marketing efforts are also on the agenda for the future, she said.
 "Things are working, but we want to get them to where they are generating more," Schramm stated.
 "We're really excited to get Stephanie on board, and are happy to have her on the team."
 Moser began her career at Mount Marty College after moving to Yankton in February 1992. She is married to Brad Moser and has two children: Quentin, 11; and Payton, 8.

 Moser hopes she can help do good things for the community she has come to call home.
 "I'm a Yankton resident, so this job was really appealing to me," she said. "I wanted to take all the professional skills I had from my previous employment and put them to good use for Yankton initiatives. I'll be working with the city, the Chamber and area businesses and trying to figure out how we can best move the community forward."
