The deeply-rooted and well-documented recruiting rivalry between the baseball programs at Mount Marty College and Dakota Wesleyan University is about to undergo a rather key change. Steve Gust resigned Tuesday as DWU head coach to accept the head coaching position at NCAA Division II Minnesota-Crookston. Since Gust took over in Mitchell back in 2009, he and MMC head coach Andy Bernatow have locked horns on the recruiting trail and on the baseball diamond.

The Tigers defeated the Lancers in a thrilling 2009 Great Plains Athletic Conference tournament championship game, but the Lancers exacted revenge in 2010 claiming the league regular

In 2012, Mount Marty stunned the GPAC by winning the tournament title as the No. 7 seed, and this spring, DWU advanced to the championship game as the the No. 5 seed — ultimately losing

MMC-DWU Baseball Rivalry Will See A Key Change

Getting their teams to that point, however, has been the real story with Gust and Bernatow. Mount Marty has found success recruiting and developing area title, while DWU has had similar luck, though on a much lesser scale.

The Lancers have also developed a nice pipeline to Mitchell talent, landing most famously Jared Schmidt, the one-time GPAC Player of the Year. This season, Mount Marty had three Mitchell players on its roster, and has already added at least one more for the 2015 season.

DWU, to be fair, had one Mitchell native on its 2014 roster, but Mount Marty has consistently held the edge in South Dakota products — the advantage was 24-to-14 this spring. Such recruiting battles aren't exclusive to baseball, though, but that's what makes the MMC-

DWU rivalry exciting. Whether it's men's and women's basketball or volleyball, the two South Dakota schools in the GPAC face each other off the field just as much as they do on the field. And that, to me, is what makes the baseball future all the more interesting.

DWU Baseball Coach Gust Resigns

stepping down, DWU Athletic Director Curt Hart announced Tuesday afternoon

Gust. who led the Tigers to the championship game of the Great Plains Athletic Conference Postseason Tournament in May.

has accepted the head coaching position at the University of Minnesota Crookston, an NCAA Division II school that competes in the Northern Sun Intercollegiate Con-

Gust, who came to Dakota Weslevan from Northland Community and Technical College in East Grand Forks, Minn., and has family in and around the Grand Forks and Fargo area, said the chance to be closer to family played a large role in his decision.

In six seasons at the helm of the Tiger baseball program, Gust went 154-157, including a 27-24 mark in 2014. DWU earned the fifth seed in the GPAC postseason tournament this year, and made it to the championship game before losing to Midland University. He has coached 48 All-GPAC athletes, including one pitcher-of-the-year and one playerof-the-year. He has also coached three

GPAC Gold Glove winners, two NAIA All-Americans and 11 NAIA Scholar-Athletes. Gust takes over a Crookston team that went 1-47 overall and 0-36 in the NSIC in 2014. He will wrap up at Dakota Wesleyan in late June and start his duties when only a handful of teams had a legitimate chance to win the national championship. The seven other teams represent relative newcomers to the college game's biggest stage.

Texas Tech will be here for the first time; Vanderbilt. UC Irvine and TCU for the second time; Louisville and Virginia for the third time; and Mississippi for the fifth time but first since 1972.

Of the eight national seeds that started the 64team tournament two weeks ago, only No. 3 Virginia and No. 7 TCU are left. That's the fewest to advance to the CWS since the tournament went to its current format in

"You don't let a team in just because of a name. You have to earn it," said Dennis Poppe, the NCAA's top administrator for the CWS from 1987-2013. "You still like to see the old standbys, the traditional teams. But you get a little mix of everything here. That's what makes it cool.'

State won the national title as a No. 4 regional seed, the equivalent of a No. 13 seed in college basketball. Another came in 2012, with Stony Brook and Kent State crashing the party. Last year, Indiana made its first CWS appearance.

Now consider that teams like Kennesaw State and College of Charleston made it through regionals this year while the top two national seeds, Oregon State and Florida, did not.

Key events in the move toward parity: the NCAA's capping baseball scholarships at 11.7 per team in 1991 and limiting rosters to 35 players in 2008. Talent once hoarded by the big baseball schools in the South and West began to spread out. Another factor was the change in bats stemming from concern beginning in the late 1990s that the game had become too offensive. The bats were redesigned to reduce power, making dominant teams less so.

Since current bat standards went into effect in 2011. offensive numbers have hit lows not seen since the wooden-bat era. Next year, in hopes of goosing the offense, the raised-seam ball will be replaced by the flatseam ball. Research has shown that the flat-seam ball travels farther and faster because wind resistance is decreased.

"I'm not one that has gotten as exercised as some and lament the lack of offense," UC Irvine's Gillespie said. "I don't perceive that people are running away from the game.'

ESPN's family of networks carried more than 200 regular-season games this season - most through its broadband ESPN3 network — and for the second straight year is televising every game of the NCAA tournament.

Bertman said he worries for the future of the college game because fans can no longer relate to year-in, yearout power programs like they can in football and basketball. Plus, he said, the style of play isn't as appealing as it once was.

"A bunch of bunting and singles and dribblers," Bertman called it.

"The base hit with a man on second and two outs should still be a big part of our game, and so should the ability to score four runs in one inning," he said. "Those things are taken away from us by this weak bat and the parity we have."
