British Author Receives State Historical Society Award

PIERRE — Fraser Harrison, author of the award-winning travel memoir "Infinite West: Travels in South Dakota," has earned the Herbert S. Schell Award for the best article in Volume 44 of "South Dakota History." The quarterly journal of the South Dakota State Historical Society, "South Dakota History" publishes materials that contribute to the historical and cultural knowledge of the state and surrounding region.

This year's Schell Award was presented at the Governor's Awards for History luncheon on Saturday, May 30, during the South Dakota State Historical Society Annual History Conference at the Ramkota RiverCentre in Pierre. Nathan Johnson of Yankton, a friend of Harrison's, accepted the award on Harrison's behalf.

Harrison's article, "Yankton: Portrait of a River City," appeared in the Spring 2014 issue and is a modern look at the historic capital of Dakota Territory. It begins with the author's confession that his initial visit to the town did not result in "love at first sight." His first impression was formed during a short stay while he researched "Infinite West," published by the South Dakota Historical Society Press in 2012. On that trip, he did not find the Nathan Johnson, center, of Yankton accepted the Schell Award on behalf of Fraser Harrison. Presenting the award were Jay D. Vogt, left, director of the South Dakota State Historical Society in Pierre; and David Wolff of Spearfish, vice-president of the SDSHS board of trustees.

"gem-like historic town" his guidebook had promised. Determined to discover the real Yankton, he returned for a six-week visit in the summer of 2013. The result was his award-winning article.

"Fraser Harrison is not afraid to re-examine initial impressions, and by crafting an interesting article based in the history and people of Yankton, he looks at how the past influences our present," says Jeanne Ode, managing editor of "South Dakota History."

Harrison's chance to reconsider his earlier impressions came about thanks to a conversation with a Yankton resident who offered him a place to stay and to a grant from the South Dakota Humanities Council. When he is not travelling, Harrison resides in England, where he has published several books, worked as a freelance broadcaster for the BBC and contributed to major newspapers throughout the United Kingdom.

"With his usual wit and insight, Harrison has contributed a thought-provoking testament of modern Yankton," says Jay D. Vogt, director of the South Dakota State Historical Society. "His article delves into present-day people and places, while showing Yankton's continued connection to its rough-and-tumble past as a frontier town known as 'Mother City of the Dakotas.'"

The Herbert S. Schell Award, one of the Governor's Awards for History, is named for a longtime University of South Dakota history professor who became a leading authority on South Dakota history. Each year, a committee judges the major articles in "South Dakota History" according to depth of scholarly research, readability and significance to the history of South Dakota and the Northern Great Plains. Along with an award plaque, the winner receives $250.

The Spring 2014 issue of "South Dakota History" containing Harrison's award-winning article is available for $10.00 plus shipping and tax and can be purchased through most bookstores or ordered directly from the South Dakota Historical Society Press. Visit www.sdspress.com or call (605) 773-6009. "Infinite West: Travels in South Dakota" is available for $17.95 plus shipping and tax.

same terminology," Nickles said. "It's just knowing when to do it."

Added Jackson, "Almost everyone has an idea how to treat X, Y or Z in a human, but it's not always the same with a dog. Those can be valuable seconds and minutes."

The instances in which a dog would be injured would vary.

For example, during a standoff situation where the dog is potentially shot or stabbed, paramedics could then treat the dogs on scene. Or in a situation where the dog is off the leash, first responders could save time by providing any assistance on site.

"You never know what you're walking into," Nickles said. "No two calls are ever the same."

In the event that a dog is seriously injured to the point where extra attention is needed, the only option would be veterinary hospitals in Sioux Falls.

"It's all about bringing the care to the animal," Jackson said.

Jackson and Nickles were joined by fellow Yankton County EMS and Search & Rescue students Christina Schwarz, Jean Scherschligt, Cara Conrad-Koupal and Jamie Freeman.

In the event that they're presented with just such a situation with a K9, the students are now prepared, Nickles said.

"We hope we never need to use any of this, but at least now we're ready," he said.
