Language Barriers Part Of The Enjoyment At Archery Tournaments

BY JEREMY HOECK
jeremy.hoeck@yankton.net

"She speaks French, so can you translate it later?"

That was the question posed at Press & Dakotan summer intern Alyssa Sobotka and I on Friday afternoon as we prepared to interview an archer and coach from Benin (a small African country).

A group of archers from 3-4 different countries were on the practice round, getting ready for next week's World Archery Youth Championships. We saw the two people from Benin, and thought that would make for an interesting interview -- as are any interviews with international archers.

Alyssa and I introduced ourselves to the Benin coach, Paul Zinsou, and asked if we could talk to his archer – and daughter – Merveille Zinsou. He looked at us with this confused expression. Was he thinking no, maybe not right now? Then he said to us, "She speaks French, so can you translate it later?"

That would have been incredibly difficult, so we asked if Paul could just translate her responses to a couple of our questions. And he graciously agreed to. It was a rather short interview, probably four minutes long, and to be honest, the language barrier presented a challenge.

But you know what? Alyssa (and I don't mean to speak for her) and I didn't mind one bit. It was something new for us, and I'm sure it was new for Paul and Merveille. If either Alyssa or I spoke fluent French, the interview could have produced much more, but even without it, the whole incident proved to us how unique the World Archery Youth Championships are for Yankton and its residents.

Over the years at all of these international archery tournaments, I've learned that for the most part, you can communicate clearly with someone, no matter what country they're from. Only a couple times in the last 8-9 years have I approached someone and realized there was no way we would be able to communicate. It's an understandable occurrence, given how many foreign archers our town has welcomed.

I've conducted interviews with adult and youth archers from the likes of South Africa, Germany, Estonia, New Zealand, Australia, Liechtenstein, Sweden, Argentina, Brazil and Italy. While I'm hoping to add to that list within the next eight days, it's already been an educational experience. Every one of those interviews has been with someone who speaks English, albeit in mostly broken English.

I remember one person last summer saying that archery is the universal language. Not everyone may speak English (though typically at least one person in each group does), but they all 'speak' archery. It's the common ground between everyone. And it's something I've loved to experience.

MLB: A's Call Up Switch Pitcher

The ambidextrous pitcher entered the game against the Boston Red Sox at the start of the seventh inning after being called up Friday by the Oakland Athletics.

Wearing a specially designed glove, he threw warmup pitches with his right hand then switched to his left to face lefty Brock Holt.

After Holt grounded out to first, Venditte put his glove on his left hand and pitched to righty Hanley Ramirez, who singled on the second pitch. Then, still pitching with his right arm, he got righty Mike Napoli to ground into an inning-ending double play.

Fans may stare when Venditte switches his glove from one hand to the other, but the Athletics promoted him because he pitched very well this season at Triple-A Nashville.

"There's a little bit of a sideshow to it for good reason," Melvin said. "But the reason he's here is because he's performed."

Venditte took the mound to the song "Both Sides, Now," performed by Joni Mitchell.

In 17 outings this season, 16 in relief, Venditte was 1-0 with a 1.36 ERA and held opponents to a .167 batting average. In eight minor league seasons, the first seven in the New York Yankees organization, he has a 2.37 ERA with 52 saves and nine starts.

The last time a pitcher threw with both hands in a major league game was on Sept. 28, 1995, when Greg Harris did it with the Montreal Expos. It was the next-to-last game of a career in which he appeared in 703, and he is the only pitcher in the modern era to do that.

In other moves, the Athletics optioned right-hander Dan Otero to Nashville and moved Coco Crisp to the 60-day disabled list with a neck injury.

Oakland catcher Stephen Vogt faced Venditte in the minors about five years ago.

"It's a sight to see and he's very good both ways," Vogt said. "When we signed him I was excited because I want to see what it's like to catch a guy like that. He's kind of got the same stuff from both sides. So whether it's a right-handed hitter or a left-handed hitter, you call the game accordingly. It's fun to see."

Venditte has the matchup edge, throwing left-handed to lefties and right-handed to righties, except when he
