Minn. Archbishop's Downfall Follows Claims He Didn't Protect Children

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Archbishop John Nienstedt's leadership of the Archdiocese of St. Paul and Minneapolis unraveled over a painful two years.

A church archivist accused him of leaving abusive clergy in parishes and church jobs without warning parents or police. A task force he appointed to investigate confirmed the archdiocese had been negligent. Around the same time, he faced allegations of his own inappropriate sexual conduct, but he didn't reveal specifics.

Through it all, Nienstedt rejected calls for his resignation. Then, less than two weeks ago, a prosecutor brought child-endangerment charges against the archdiocese, and on Monday, he stepped down.

"I leave with a clear conscience knowing that my team and I have put in place solid protocols to ensure the protection of minors and vulnerable adults," Nienstedt wrote in the announcement.

But the Rev. Michael Tegeder, a Minneapolis priest and frequent Nienstedt critic, said the archbishop "came into this diocese without really any empathy" and "undermined so many of the good things that were going on here."

2 South Dakota Officials Oppose Renaming Harney Peak

BY JAMES NORD
Associated Press

SIOUX FALLS — Two members of Gov. Dennis Daugaard's cabinet are concerned about a push to rename Harney Peak with its Lakota name, saying it could confuse visitors who might want to visit the Black Hills landmark.

Game, Fish and Parks Secretary Kelly Hepler and Tourism Secretary Jim Hagen have submitted letters to the state Board on Geographic Names to oppose the renaming of Harney Peak as Hinhan Kagan, which means Making of Owls. The state Board on Geographic Names preliminarily recommended the name change in May and is expected to make a final recommendation on June 29. The U.S. Board of Geographic Names would make the final decision.

Harney Peak is the highest point in the U.S. east of the Rocky Mountains. Supporters of the change argue the current name is offensive because Army Gen. William S. Harney led a group of soldiers who killed Sioux Indians in Nebraska in 1855.

Hepler and Hagen said in their letters that the proposed name is difficult to pronounce and that it would confuse tourists.

Hagen said Monday that he's sensitive to the opinions surrounding the proposed name change but that the name Harney Peak is known to many people across the U.S. and around the world. He said changing the name could have a detrimental effect on tourism.

Hepler wasn't available for comment. A spokeswoman for Gov. Dennis Daugaard said in an email that the governor hasn't taken a position on the proposed name change.

State Board on Geographic Names Chairwoman June Hansen declined to speak to a reporter on Monday. Board Vice Chairman Jay Vogt didn't immediately return a request for comment.

the information that we currently have for the project in a public forum, and another public meeting will be sharing the survey results."

Committing to the project either way would require more review from architects and community members. Although the board is far away from making any major decisions, surveys will take place over the next few months. Adding public opinion into the equation will help school officials to decide on how to move forward and prioritize accordingly.

Budgets were outlined and total cost possibilities were brought before the board on Monday. The total cost of renovating Crane Youngworth stadium would be roughly $1.9 million with the addition of artificial turf and $1.4 million with the continued maintenance of a regular grass field. In order to accommodate football, Williams Field would need $2.4 million.

Besides financial concerns, there are many other factors that would affect the board's decision.

"In the analysis from the engineering firms, they gave us that three-to-five year timeline," said school board president Kathy Greeneway. "We want to move forward with this as a work in process in gathering information from the public."

Along with the need to renovate sports facilities, the board also expressed concern about the current condition of the elementary school facilities, specifically, the classrooms and safety and the ability to open up some room for development," she said. "And 15th St. is just for additional development and growth in the community."

The next meeting to discuss the 2016 budget is set for sometime in early August. Nelson said there are still a number of steps the staff and commissioners will need to take between now and the next meeting.

"We'll go back and take comments and visit with commissioners on some of the items that we talked about tonight," she said. "Then we'll put together our entire budget proposal and bring it to them no later than Aug. 1. Then I'll present it to them in full detail, probably the first week of August."

Monday's meeting also focused on funding requests of outside agencies, which Nelson said will be discussed in the next meeting, too.

"We concluded that we will talk more as a committee about some of those (funding) recommendations," she said. "We'll have our outside agency committee proposal as well."

The next meeting will also discuss proposals for adding a special events coordinator and a GIS analyst to the city staff.

major learning areas. These environments will also be considered.

"I think everyone agrees that it's not just about our athletic facilities but what the facilities are like that kids go to school in every day," said Kindle.

Plans continue for a discussion of an entire facilities study. This would involve engineers visiting school facilities and the school board figuring out what changes need to be made while moving forward into the next school year.

"I'm just looking for the community to step forward and give us some guidance," said Greeneway. "It would help us to make a decision if we have concerns addressed."

To facilitate said communication, the school board currently has a system in place called "Connect Five." This allows students, parents and community members to receive e-mail updates from the school board. This includes meeting times, school news and other helpful information for anyone who is interested in the improvement of school facilities. People can sign up for these e-mails on the Yankton School District website under the communications section.

"We just needed a little more direction from the board on how much more we can go forward with the project and getting more information from the public into our decision making," said Kindle.

Other topics discussed Monday included:

- Five-year capital layout plan: This plan would provide expenditures for everything from building renovation to technological implications.

- P-cards: Allows the schools spending to be condensed on strictly regulated cards into a monthly payment instead of submitting individual paperwork for multiple vendors and cardholders.

- Athletic Training Rule Changes: Amendments were made to the current ineligibility rules including the addition of nicotine as an illegal substance and suspension requirements for possession of such substances in reference to athletic participation.

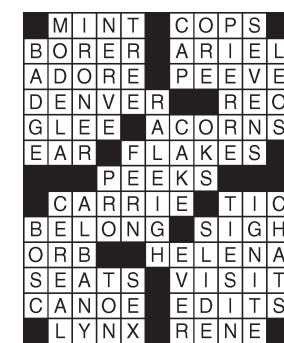

- Attendance Policy: These changes allotted for students participating in college visits to still participate in after-school activities despite missing part of the school day.
