EPA Eyes Fuel Efficiency For Trucks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Obama administration on Friday proposed tougher fuel-efficiency standards for medium and heavy-duty trucks, the latest move by President Barack Obama in his second-term drive to reduce pollution blamed for global warming.

The Environmental Protection Agency issued new rules that would lower carbon dioxide emissions from trucks and vans by 24 percent by 2027. It would cut fuel costs by about $170 billion and reduce oil consumption by up to 1.8 billion barrels over the lifetime of vehicles sold under the rule.

The long-expected rules come one day after Pope Francis issued a teaching document calling for the world to take action to slow climate change.

Putin Criticizes US But Offers To Cooperate On Global Crises

BY SANDY MACINTYRE
AND VLADIMIR ISACHENKOV
Associated Press

ST. PETERSBURG, Russia — Despite the showdown with the West over Ukraine, Moscow wants to cooperate with Washington and its allies in dealing with the threat posed by the Islamic State group and other global challenges, President Vladimir Putin said Friday as he tried to allay investors' fears over Russia's course.

Putin blamed the United States for ignoring Russia's interests and trying to enforce its will on others, but he also sent conciliatory signals, saying that Moscow wants a quick settlement to the Iranian nuclear standoff and a peaceful political transition in Syria.

Speaking at a major economic forum, Putin also insisted that Russia wants February's Ukraine peace agreement to succeed. Fighting there will stop, he said, once Ukraine provides broader rights to its eastern regions, gives amnesty to the rebels and calls local elections there.

The annual event, intended to burnish Russia's image before global investors, was tarnished by the freezing of Russian accounts in France and Belgium on Thursday as part of an effort to enforce a $50 billion judgment to compensate shareholders of the now-defunct Yukos oil company.

At a meeting with top executives of global news agencies, including The Associated Press, which began nearly three hours behind schedule at around midnight, Putin sought to downplay the freeze and said that Russia will contest it.

Putin argued that the arbitration court in The Hague, Netherlands, which issued the ruling last year, does not have jurisdiction over Russia.

The court ruled that Russia must pay damages to shareholders in the oil company, which was dismantled in a politically driven onslaught that saw its chief executive, Mikhail Khodorkovsky, sentenced to 10 years in prison.

EU and U.S. sanctions over Ukraine have helped push Russia's economy into recession and cut investment and imports dramatically. Putin, however, argued Friday that the Russian economy is on the path to recovery and that the West hurt itself by imposing the sanctions.

Asked about the downing of a Malaysia Airlines plane over eastern Ukraine last July that killed all 298 people on board and triggered the toughening of Western sanctions, Putin said it's necessary to wait for the conclusions of the Dutch Safety Board, which is investigating the crash.

Controversy continues over who downed the airliner. Ukraine and the West suspect it was destroyed by a Russian surface-to-air missile fired by Russian soldiers or Russia-backed separatist rebels fighting in the area. Russia denies that.

Putin referred to an unofficial report alleging that the damage to the Malaysian airliner could have been inflicted by a missile launched from the area held by Ukrainian forces at the time.

Putin's speech on the economy decidedly lacked any engagement on his part or specific proposals to turn around the economy. A large number of Russian and foreign investors in the audience were reading news or emails on their smartphones as Putin delivered a speech in which he did not address the severe crisis that businesses in Russia are facing.

In contrast to the economy speech, Putin was much more animated while responding to questions about foreign policy.

His emphasis on foreign policy has reflected the way the Kremlin has been running Russia since the Ukrainian conflict began. Critics have blamed Putin for sacrificing the country's economic growth for geopolitical ends such as the 2014 annexation of Crimea.

David Iakobashvili, founder of Russia's once-largest beverage company and head of a Russia-US business council, said businessmen have gotten used to the fact that Putin seems to prioritize foreign policy goals over domestic development.

"It's very clear today that geopolitics is more important from his point of view," he told The Associated Press. "But... we shall adapt to whatever environment has been presented by the government and act accordingly."

Addressing the forum, Putin argued that Russia wants February's peace deal for Ukraine to succeed. He said Russia was exerting pressure on the rebels to abide by the agreement and urged the U.S. to encourage Kiev to comply.

Ukraine and the West have accused Russia of breaking the peace deal by supporting the rebels with troops and weapons. Moscow denies this.

Commenting on the accusations, Putin said the rebels are defending themselves against the Ukrainian military. He added that "once an attempt is made to solve the problem by political means, those weapons will be gone."

In Washington, State Department spokesman John Kirby called on Russia to fully implement February's ceasefire agreement in Ukraine and remove heavy weapons from the country.

As for Putin linking the arms to a political solution, Kirby said it was "difficult to have a political solution when you've still got thousands of combined Russian separatist forces inside Ukraine fomenting violence and instability, and violating the agreement that they signed up to."

Putin used the investment conference as yet another opportunity to blame the U.S. and the European Union for triggering the Ukrainian crisis by refusing to take into account what he described as Russia's legitimate interests.

"They have pushed us back to the line beyond which we can't retreat," he said. "Russia isn't seeking hegemony or some ephemeral superpower status."

He was defiant when asked about investigations into alleged corruption at FIFA, saying that Russia fairly won the 2018 World Cup bid contest.

"If anyone has evidence, let them present it," he said. "We won in a fair fight and are going to host the World Cup."

Putin said Russia wants to cooperate with the West in tackling global threats and challenges — including Islamic State, calling the extremist group an "absolute evil" that requires stronger joint efforts to combat.

Putin also said Russia wants a deal ending the standoff over the Iranian nuclear program to be signed as planned before the end of June, but cautioned against putting "unfulfillable" demands upon Tehran.

And he also voiced readiness to encourage Syrian President Bashar Assad to discuss the peaceful political transition. He explained Moscow's backing for the Syrian ruler was to prevent the victory of radical forces who would begin a reign of terror.

"We are ready to work with the president to ensure political transformation, so that all Syrians have access to instruments of power," he said.

its medical school and social work programs, and the Vermillion community. Our goal in Vermillion is to recruit innovative businesses, and Senscio Systems is an ideal partner for us," notes Welch.

Senscio Systems, too, recognizes the value of a partnership with Vermillion and establishing a regional hub in the Upper Midwest. Senscio's CEO, Dr. Piali De, says that, "Very early on, we identified that South Dakota was an ideal place to deploy the Ibis system and to grow our sales and operations presence. We believe that our technology is truly revolutionary and allows people in rural and remote areas to age in place, live healthier and put providers in closer contact with their patients."

Noting Senscio's long-term interests, De says, "We believe that our regional hub in Vermillion and some early and large-scale partnerships we have with providers in South Dakota will be a springboard to building a manufacturing and customer service base in South Dakota. Our system includes hardware and back-end service components — such as call centers — that need to be built and staffed, respectively. Vermillion and the I-29 corridor in South Dakota position us perfectly to do that."

"It's fun to come back – it's a tradition," Jack said. "You maintain a tradition, it's what you do."

"I don't know what it all means," David said. "But it feels good."

The celebration continues today (Saturday), and includes a performance of the Beseda Dancers and the crowning of the 2015 Czech Days Queen this evening.
