sports marketing and media program.

The sports industry has seen tremendous growth fueled by the rise of social media, televised coverage, online streaming and extensive marketing, Van Maanen said.

"The online content has exploded," she said. "There's a high level of interest in sports and a growing awareness of expanded career opportunities in the field."

The new major and minor will use existing resources as well as faculty reassigned to new courses supporting the major. The increased enrollment created by the major will contribute to its ongoing support.

Even before it starts, the USD program has drawn strong interest from current and prospective students, Van Maanen said.

"We have heard from a significant number of existing USD students who plan to transfer into the program, and word is traveling fast beyond campus," she said. "I have already met with a number of high school students who are interested in learning more about the program. We anticipate a graduation rate of approximately 15 students annually."

Graduates of the new major can work at every level, but especially in marketing, media and managerial positions in the industry, Van Maanen said. Those fields include pro sports teams, high school and college teams, facility management, the sporting goods industry, resorts, fundraising, event management and fitness companies.

Those graduates can find a wide variety of careers in the immediate area, she said. She pointed to professional sports teams such as the Sioux Falls Stampede, Sioux Falls Skyforce, Sioux Falls Canaries and Sioux Falls Storm as well as teams in Rapid City, Sioux City and throughout the Midwest.

DRAWING ON CONTACTS

In designing the new major, USD officials consulted with professionals in the industry, including USD alumnus John Gillis. He earned his bachelor's and master's degrees in mass communication from the Vermillion campus. He has served for 26 years — currently as the associate director of development — for the National Federation of State High School Associations (NFHSAA).

"He's an insider in the industry who knows its career potential," Van Maanen said. "He has hired USD interns in the past and has provided input on program changes."

Gillis pointed to the wide variety of opportunities with the new USD program.

"I feel that this academic major has unlimited potential as it can be used in several settings," he said.

For example, NFHSAA combines marketing and media on a daily basis to promote various national programs and initiatives, he said.

"As we seek corporate sponsors for those programs and initiatives, we use all kinds of media to reach those goals — which (today) includes the Internet and social media — in addition to 'traditional

The USD sports marketing and media program didn't exist when Gillis was in college. However, he said his USD education and work experience have allowed him to adapt to today's sports environment. He described himself as a type of "hybrid staff member with one foot in media and the other in sports marketing."

"However, a person who graduates with USD's new academic degree would do so already possessing the knowledge that it took me years to gain through practical work experience," he said. "Without question, this is an extremely valuable academic program."

GETTING TO WORK

The new USD program requires internships for the major, Van Maanen said. Each department supporting the major offers an internship coordinator.

"We have had many interns work within the sports industry, so the ties to the profession already exist," she said.

USD coordinated the new major among various departments based on industry contacts, Van Maanen said. Each department plans to tailor new courses to meet changing industry needs.

"There are many career possibilities that do not fall neatly into the area of a single college department," she said. "The sports industry is a good example of that."

Gillis feels confident about the new program, given his familiarity with USD academic offerings, particularly the Department of Media & Journalism.

"I strongly believe that USD's course offerings and sports marketing major would compare extremely favorably with any such similar course offerings and majors at other universities around the nation," he said.

Van Maanen believes graduates of the new sports marketing & media major will definitely be at the top of their game, so a lot of excitement about the new major and minor, just like there is in the sporting industry in general," she said.

the Historical Society that will be in the building that is from 1887. That is when the fire department, city hall and jail were first built in Yankton."

Nickles said another item they've received from the public has been a variety of postcards.

"Back in the early 1900s, it was a big thing to have postcards," he said. "We actually have six of those postcards that were either brought, bought or we had in our possession. (They'll) show one of the old fire trucks that Yankton had, or maybe a significant fire. That's kind of given us an idea, in the future, to do more postcards and actually use them as a fundraiser."

Nickles said there will be many methods to display the collected items.

"I call it a 'storybook frame' that hangs on the wall," he said. "The pictures would be behind glass and you can flip through them. The scrapbook that I mentioned, we're probably going to put those ledger books behind glass in a cabinet so they can't be messed with and then we'll reproduce that scrapbook and laminate the pages so it'll be available for people to flip through and read the old articles while preserving the other ones. We're preserving a lot of our stuff, displaying it and trying to digitize it so, if anything ever happens to it, we have copies of everything."

In addition to articles and photos, the museum will also host two hose carts, two vintage fire trucks, various pieces of equipment and a piece of steel from the World Trade Center.

So far, $28,000 has been raised for the effort with an estimated $16,000 worth of in-kind donations of supplies, equipment and labor.

Nickles said construction is progressing.

"We do have some dirt work done," he said. "We've got a contractor that donated his equipment and we had some dirt hauled in to bring it up to the grade we need for the floor of the building."

Nickles said the goal is to have the museum open to the public by Oct. 1.

"All the displays may not be completely complete when we do that, but at least the building will be up, the trucks inside and we can get started putting stuff together," he said.

Anyone interested in donating items pertaining to the history of the Yankton Fire Department is encouraged to call Station #2 at (605) 668-5228.
