do their best.

It's also about the personal relationships you develop with the kids.

Tammy agrees and adds that she relies on her "motherly instinct" to help the girls and offer them a positive influence "some how, some way."

And having no daughters of her own, Tammy says she enjoys the interaction she has with the girls.

"It's nice because I have anywhere from 17-24 daughters at a time."

"Sometimes you're their worst enemy and sometimes you're their best friend," Steve says. "They are good kids and we have a great community."

Steve and Tammy feel they are blessed to be a part of the Wynot community.

"It's a great community. They help with whatever they can," says Steve.

Whether it's helping on the farm or watching the kids, Steve and Tammy couldn't be happier to be a part of Wynot's community.

In a time when family time is hard to come by, Tammy and Steve say communication and strong support are key.

You have to utilize all your support resources, Tammy adds. "You have to communicate among yourselves. And you have to pray."

Steve says that understanding what each other is going through is what has kept them strong.

"The support we have for each other really comes easy. We never have to fight each other."
