Pipeline

sions, the report said.

In both alternatives, the oil would be shipped in rail cars as bitumen, a thick, tar-like substance, rather than as a liquid.

The State Department was required to conduct a new environmental analysis after the pipeline's operator, Calgary-based TransCanada, changed the project's route though Nebraska. The Obama administration blocked the project last year because of concerns that the original route would have jeopardized environmentally sensitive land in the Sand Hills region.

The administration later approved a southern section of the pipeline, from Cushing, Okla., to the Texas coast, as part of what President Barack Obama has called an "all of the above" energy policy that embraces a wide range of sources, from oil and gas to renewables such as wind and solar.

The pipeline plan has become a flashpoint in the U.S. debate over climate change. Republicans and business and labor groups have urged the Obama administration to approve the pipeline as a source of much-needed jobs and a step toward North American energy independence.

Environmental groups have been pressuring the president to reject the pipeline, saying it would carry "dirty oil" that contributes to global warming. They also worry about a spill.

Industry groups and Republicans hailed the report, saying the Obama administration was moving closer to approving Keystone XL, which has been under consideration since 2008.

"No matter how many times KXL is reviewed, the result is the same: no significant environmental impact," said Marty Durbin, executive vice president of the American Petroleum Institute, the largest lobbying group for the oil and gas industry.

The report "puts this important, job-creating project one step closer to reality," Durbin said.

Environmentalists blasted the report.

"This analysis fails in its review of climate impacts, threats to endangered wildlife like whooping cranes and woodland caribou, and the concerns of tribal communities," said Jim Lyon, vice president of the National Wildlife Federation.

If Keystone XL would not speed tar sands development, "why are oil companies pouring millions into lobbying and political contributions to build it?" Lyon asked. "By rejecting the Keystone XL tar sands pipeline, President Obama can keep billions of tons of climate-disrupting carbon pollution locked safely in the ground."

The draft report begins a 45-day comment period, after which the State Department will issue a final environmental report before Secretary of State John Kerry makes a recommendation about whether the pipeline is in the national interest.

Mehlhoff

coach at FIU.

"If it was any other opportunity, I don't know if I would've taken it," Mehlhoff said. "But knowing Cameron, he's top notch, and I have the utmost faith in him, that he'd be doing things the right way."

In his duties, Mehlhoff — who said "the less people know what you're doing, the better you're doing" — will be in charge of setting up team travel, organizing team meals on the road, and helping with any other tasks assigned by new FIU head coach Ron Turner, who was hired in January to replace Mario Cristobal.

One of the biggest adjustments so far was the day-to-day involvement in the smallest details of a football program, Mehlhoff said. Such issues as NCAA compliance and academics were suddenly areas of focus.

"It's a transition from the pros," he said. "In the NFL, we want to do everything so players and coaches can concentrate on football. When you get down here, you can't do that."

Joining a rather young staff fits the energetic feel to the program, Mehlhoff said. After all, FIU is a rather new D-I program, having started playing football in 2002.

"Since the first time I came down here, they've all treated me like family," he said. "We have a lot of young guys, but we all have great experiences; NFL experience. We've got a very good mix of guys."

The Golden Panthers had a 3-9 record last season, including a 2-6 mark in the Sun Belt Conference. FIU will begin competing in Conference USA this year.

The program has a way to go to compete on the national level, but it's also come a long way, Mehlhoff said.

"It's amazing all the changes down here," he said. "When they first started, they were practicing on a soccer field. Now we have a stadium that holds 22,500 people and the facilities are amazing."

Amid all the moving boxes and paperwork was the realization that he was settling in for a job he frequently thought about, Mehlhoff said.

"I've been extremely fortunate and blessed so far," he said. "I mean, I'm only 26, and there aren't many guys this young in this role, so I definitely feel lucky with where I'm at."
