One-Time Funding Could Help YSD

BY ANDREW ATWAL

The South Dakota Legislature approved spending more than $6 million in one-time funding to provide aid to technical schools and school districts. The amount equates to around $45 per student across the come law if Gov. Dennis Daugaard signs

YSD school board president Chris Specht said any money allocated by the Legislature is appreciated by all districts across the state. However, he said one-time money also has its downfalls. 'The problem with one-time money is it does not allow districts to plan for the future, nor does it help reduce the 10 percent revenue cut from prior years," Specht said. "We all want more from our government, but no one wants their taxes to increase and no one wants their benefits cut.' The school state aid formula is based in part on a per-student allotment. That allotment increases annually by the Consumer Price Index (CPI), or 3 percent, whichever is less. For this year's overall state budget, Daugaard recommends a 3 percent ongoing increase in state aid to school districts. In FY 2012, Daugaard announced funding cuts across the board, which included cuts to education. Schools across the state were projecting about a 5 percent decrease to funding, but that decrease turned out to be more than 8.5 percent.

"If the state does give out onetime money, it's based on next fall's student enrollment," YSD business manager Jason Bietz said. "If the $45 per student becomes law, you make an assumption, based on today's enrollment, that this would bring around $118,000 to Yankton School

However, Bietz is not ready to take that figure to the bank.

"We really don't know what to fully expect yet, since the bill hasn't been signed by the governor and we don't know all the details surrounding the one-time money," he said. "We appreciate one-time money, but we're still searching for a long-term solution.'

The bill spends around $5.8 mil

$7 Million Tag Added To Measure

Associated Press

PIERRE — South Dakota lawmakers on Thursday passed a comprehensive bipartisan economic development plan intended to help recruit projects to the state after they pledged $7 million to kick-start the funding.

A negotiating committee added the $7 million appropriation and a provision that would halt its funding in tough times Thursday during the penultimate day of South Dakota's main legislative

The House later voted 60-6 to pass the bill, and the Senate followed with a 31-2 vote. Gov. Dennis Daugaard is expected to sign it into law.

Lawmakers noted that in contrast with the gridlock in Washington, Republican and Democratic legislative leaders cooperated in South Dakota to craft the

"I think that most of the country and South Dakota is watching how we handle this," said Senate Republican Leader Russell Olson of Wentworth.

Building South Dakota would eventually be funded on an ongoing basis by a portion of the contractors' excise tax collected on large projects and some of the unclaimed property that the state receives from abandoned bank accounts.

But most of those funds won't be available until 2015 or 2016, so sponsors are asking the House and Senate to "prime the pump" with $7 million from like this, then we need to be willing to put some skin in the game right away this first year," said Brown, R-Gettysburg. Republicans and Democrats worked for two months to find a compromise to help South Dakota better compete with other states in recruiting large projects and to help lure smaller projects to the The bill also helps communities build the infrastructure needed to encourage development, works with the state's technical centers on training and helps K-12 schools bear the cost of English language training when a project draws workers from other cultures. House Democratic Leader Bernie Hunhoff, of Yankton, called the bill a workable piece of legislation that's only as good as the spirit in which it's implemented. 'It brings education to the forefront of economic development, which is where it should be, and it gets the biggest share of the Building South Dakota Fund," Hunhoff said. "It stresses higher quality jobs in the first sentence."

Death Penalty Rooted In Mythology

BY NATHAN JOHNSON

nathan.johnson@yankton.net

The idea that the death penalty provides justice is largely based on mythology, according to Dr. Alexander Mikulich.

Speaking to a Yankton audience Thursday night, he made that argument with facts and — as a Roman Catholic social ethicist, activist and scholar — also with Mikulich, an associate professor from the Loyola University Jesuit Social Research Institute in New Orleans, delivered his speech, "Ethical Issues and the Death Penalty," as part of the Mount Marty College Benedictine Institute lecture series. The event, held at Marian Auditorium at Mount Marty College, is sponsored by the school's Benedictine Institute for Leadership, Ethics and Social Justice. To get the audience reflecting on the death penalty, Mikulich used an exchange from J.R.R. Tolkien's "Lord of the Rings"

Frodo tells Gandalf the Wise that Gollum deserves death. In response, Gandalf says: "Deserves it! I daresay he does. Many that live deserve death. And some that die deserve life. Can you give it to them? Then do not be too eager to deal out death in judgment. For even the very wise cannot see all ends. Mikulich then instructed the audience to think about Donald Moeller and Eric Robert, the two men South Dakota executed last fall.

"We may feel with Frodo that these individuals who committed these murders deserve death," he said. "But then we might also want to hesitate to reflect with Gandalf about issues of guilt, innocence, justice and the meaning of hope. This notion was given real-life resonance during the question-and-answer portion of the lecture, when a man in the audience indicated that he believed Saddam Hussein was one who deserved to Mikulich said that the only instance in which Catholic teaching allows the contemplation of the death penalty is when someone is a threat to the common good.

THE LION SINGS TONIGHT

Soloist Jeoffrey Miller leads the first- and second-grade students at Yankton's Webster Elementary School through the roaring song "I'm A Lion" during Webster's spring concert, held Thursday night at the YHS/Summit Activities Center theatre. Students in grades 1-2 performed the program "Child of the World," while students in grades 3-5 presented the program "Celebrate You and Me." Both programs emphasized self-worth, acceptance and understanding among children. To see or purchase images from this event, visit spotted.yankton.net. (Kelly Hertz/P&D)

SERV SD Offering Online Pre-Registration

BY RANDY DOCKENDORF

randy.dockendorf@yankton.net

During emergencies, valuable time can be lost rounding up volunteers for disaster relief.

Now, citizens can register online ahead of time to offer their services if needed, according to Yankton County emergency manager Paul

The Statewide Emergency Registry of Volunteers in South Dakota (SERV SD) coordinates the pre-registration of individuals. The system operates under the state Department of Health and reaches out to anyone willing to volunteer in the event of an emergency.

If we need 15 people to set up a shelter, we can send out a message and round up one group for the job," Scherschligt

Anyone can sign up by going to the website http://serv.sd.gov, he said. The entries will go under Yankton County's Community Emergency Response Team (CERT), but it's not limited to Yankton County residents or even South Dakotans, he said.

"This will really cut the response times if we have the names already out there," he said. "What's nice about the system, if we're in the middle of a tornado wiping out an area, I an go to our database and send out the alert (for volunteers) earlier."

Yankton County CERT leaders will contact registrants with training and deployment opportunities, Scherschligt said. "We can send out messages via phone and email, and it will
