the 'Tradition!' song. We may have about 35 people on stage at the same time."

Reimler needed to adjust the routine when moving from practices on the large gym floor to performances on the smaller stage. She also has two large wedding dances with the entire cast, traditional Jewish and folk dancing, and the Russian dance performed by four high school boys.

A number of cast members said they weren't strong dancers and were unsure of the demanding routines, Reimler said.

"But they were very willing and eager to learn. I taught them how to dance (the numbers), and they were great about it," she said. "Even when they're telling me that they don't dance, they try their hardest and work on their own."

That sense of initiative has been crucial, Reimler said. She can only attend Monday rehearsals in Freeman because of her other commitments in Yankton. She teaches three nights a week at the Academy of Dance, and she's also working with Yankton High School's upcoming production of "Dirty Rotten Scoundrels."

Reimler approaches "Fiddler" much differently than her work in the dance studio.

"With musical theater, it's mostly getting your hands on the script, the musical score and instrumentation," she said. "'Fiddler' is the only show that has ever been done that comes with a choreography manual. Jerome Robbins did the choreography from the original Broadway show. This is all his vision. It's amazing, he wrote everything. I have it word for word."

However, Reimler adjusts her approach to fit the Schmeckfest dancers.

"The people are just wonderful," she said. "They look, as a community, at this one big show a year. They know the time commitment. It's late some nights, but you don't hear complaints.'

The work may be grueling for everyone, but Reimler is excited to see the final product.

"I'll go back there next week for a dress rehearsal and a final runthrough," she said. "I also plan to attend a performance. It's been really good fun."
